

The Literary Digest

A WEEKLY COMPENDIUM OF THE CONTEMPORANEOUS THOUGHT OF THE WORLD

Vol. XXIII., No. 24. Whole No. 608.

NEW YORK, DECEMBER 14, 1901.

{Price per Copy, 10c.

Contents

TOPICS OF THE DAY:

The Issues Raised in the President's Message	753
National Issues in Caricature	754-5
Cuba's Presidential Campaign (with portraits of the candidates)	756
Texas Strikes another Blow at Trusts	756
No Color Line in Hawaii	757
More Reflections on the Philippine Decision	757
Cartoons: Uncle Sam in Two Roles	757
Opening of the Charleston Exposition	758
The New Canal Treaty	759
American Ideas in Cartoon	760
Topics in Brief	760

LETTERS AND ART:

Do Women Write the Best Novels?	761
American "Art Fakirs" in Paris	761
Poets of the Younger Generation	762
Mr. Henley's Estimate of "R. L. S."	763
The Book Barometer	764

SCIENCE AND INVENTION:

The Sun's Heat; Whence and How Great?	765
Practise in an Air-Ship	765
The Sun's Influence on the Weather	766
Some Automobile Records Smashed	766
The Violet Cure	767
The Ebb and Flow of Life	767
A New Cure for Alcoholism	768
What Should Old People Eat?	768

THE RELIGIOUS WORLD:

The Jew who is Not a Jew	769
The Claim of Paganism upon Christianity	769
The Right to Heresy	770
The Status of Religion in Germany	771
Religious Notes	772

FOREIGN TOPICS:

Greek Gospels and Athenian Students	773
Germany's Latest Dueling Sensation	773
Signing of the Canal Treaty	774
Secretary Chamberlain and the German Press	775
The Crisis on the Isthmus	776

NOTABLE BOOKS OF THE DAY:

A Curious Story of Old Styria	777
A Story of Great Souls	777
The "Enormous Difference" of a Date	777
The Convulsion of a Great Nation	778
Another Princess of the Air	778
A Novel of Newspaper Life	778

MISCELLANEOUS:

Books Received	779
Current Poetry	780
Personals	782
More or Less Pungent	783
Current Events	784
Chess	787

FUNK & WAGNALLS COMPANY, PUBLISHERS, 30 LAFAYETTE PLACE, N. Y.

The RULING PASSION

By Henry van Dyke

50TH 1,000

One of the great successes of the season.

THE OUTLOOK SAYS:

"THE prime qualities of fiction are here: depth of feeling, humor, passion, and dramatic power. The manner is strong, searching, masterful; the method large, free, effective."

Drawings in Color by WALTER APPLETON CLARK

$1.50

All booksellers, or CHARLES SCRIBNER'S SONS

For the Church

THE LADIES' HOME JOURNAL and THE SATURDAY EVENING POST offer you a better way of raising money—easier and surer and more profitable than fairs, teas or suppers.

There may be several hundred dollars in it; maybe over $1000. You can surely earn as much as in fairs, etc., and with less trouble, if you'll do a little systematic work. Write to

The Curtis
Publishing Company Philadelphia

ONE HUNDRED

copies of a letter, piece of music, drawing, or any writing can be made on a Lawton Simplex Printer. No washing. No wetting of paper. Send for circulars and samples of work. Agents wanted.

LAWTON & CO., 30 Vesey St., New York.
89 Dearborn Street, Chicago.

Learn a Language by Phonograph AT HOME

We furnish a $20.00 Edison Phonograph with records of the professor's voice, giving correct accent. Recitation by phonograph. Specially written I. C. S. Instruction Papers simplify reading and writing. French, German and Spanish courses. Circular free. International Correspondence Schools, Box 1202, Scranton, Pa.

EUROPE and ORIENT

21st year. Limited Parties. Unexcelled arrangements. Terms reasonable. Organized and conducted by N. Y. DR. & MRS. H. S. PAINE, Glens Falls.

30,000 CHOICE QUOTATIONS

Hon. Joseph H. Choate:—"I have always found it the most complete and useful book of the kind ever published."

General Stewart L. Woodford:—"Useful and valuable. It has been to me a practical help."

THE CYCLOPEDIA OF PRACTICAL QUOTATIONS

Thirty Thousand Choice Quotations with Eighty-six Thousand lines of Concordance. Proverbs from the French, German, and other modern foreign languages, each followed by its English translation. Also a full list of Latin law terms and their translations. By J. K. Hoyt.

Hon. A. S. Hewitt:—"The work, always indispensable to the scholar and the author, appears to me to be incapable of further improvement."

Cover design by George Wharton Edwards. 8vo, 1205 pp. Prices: Buckram, $6.00; Law Sheep, $8.00; Half Morocco, $10.00; Full Morocco, $12.00.

FUNK & WAGNALLS COMPANY, Pubs., New York

Queen & Crescent Route and Southern Railway, the Chicago & Florida Special. Magnificent train, dining cars, composite and observation cars. Through compartment and open standard sleepers from Chicago, Cleveland, Detroit, Toledo, Pittsburgh, Louisville and Cincinnati to St. Augustine without change. Double daily service Cincinnati to New Orleans and Florida. Twenty-four hour schedule.

W. J. MURPHY, W. C. RINEARSON,
GEN'L MANAGER. GEN'L PASS'GR AGT.,
CINCINNATI.

"Sunset Limited"

(PALATIAL HOTEL ON WHEELS)

To California

All Pacific Coast Points and the Orient

Superb Equipment Fast Time
Leave New York Tuesdays, Thursdays, Saturdays
SOUTHERN PACIFIC CO.,
349 Broadway or 1 Battery Pl., N. Y.

"Some lives are like"
Horse & shoes
the more worn—the brighter."
Busy wives who use SAPOLIO never seem to grow old. Try a cake...

Readers of THE LITERARY DIGEST are asked to mention the publication when writing to advertisers.

THE LITERARY DIGEST

Hon. Thomas B. Reed
EDITOR-IN-CHIEF

The Greatest Spoken Thought of the Nineteenth Century MODERN ELOQUENCE

Ten Handsome Library Volumes

Hon. Thomas B. Reed, Editor-in-Chief

Assisted by

Edward Everett Hale

Jonathan P. Dolliver

John B. Gordon
Edwin M. Bacon
William W. Matos

James B. Pond
F. Cunliffe Owen
Champ Clark

Nathan Haskell Dole
J. Walker McSpadden
Hamilton Wright Mable

George McLean Harper
Marcus Benjamin
Albert Ellery Bergh

Theodore Roosevelt
PRESIDENT OF THE
UNITED STATES
Lorenzo Sears
Truman A. De Weese
Clark Howell

Henry W. Grady

"MODERN ELOQUENCE" marks an epoch in our literary life. For the first time are gathered together, in proper form, the profoundest thoughts of our greatest orators, wits, statesmen, litterateurs, publicists and humorists. Each is preserved just as it was given to the world. It required a master mind to sift and sort, from the mass of material, that which was most worthy.

Ex-Speaker Thomas B. Reed, the master mind among master minds during a quarter of a century of our national life, assisted by men eminent in different walks, edited, selected and arranged these volumes. Every corner of our own and the Mother Country was searched, and over a thousand collaborators were enlisted. Modern Eloquence is the result of their efforts. The keynote is freshness and keen human interest. Many of the after-dinner speeches, addresses and lectures are unobtainable elsewhere. Here is great literature as well as great eloquence. Catholicity of selection distinguishes it. No creed, no form, no section has had preference.

Henry C. Potter

After-Dinner Speeches

About the banquet board, no less than in the forum, great thoughts have been given expression, and policies and parties have been made and unmade.

The scintillant repartee of a Choate has quieted the troubled waters of international comity. Henry W. Grady's "The Race Problem" rent in twain the curtain of sectional prejudice. From Gladstone's sonorous periods it is but a few pages to the genial philosophy of Wu Ting-Fang; and from the unctuous humor of Dr. Holmes to the strenuous Americanism of President Roosevelt. Again, we turn from the graceful suavity of Lowell's wit to the biting sarcasms of Charles A. Dana, and so we get closer to our great men and their thoughts than any written words of theirs permit. We catch a glimpse of their innermost lives and most cherished ambitions. We have spread before us a panorama of modern life, intimate, full of color, palpitating.

Howells Dwight Hills

As we read Ingersoll's great lecture on "Shakespeare," and rise to the sublimity of Serviss' appreciation of "Napoleon," we marvel not alone at Shakespeare and Napoleon, but a feeling of profound respect is felt for the men who have so lucidly and charmingly presented to our mental vision the greatest soldier, and the greatest playwright of all times. Or perchance we join Josh Billings in his spirit of rollicking humor and find it impossible to decide whether his lecture on "Milk" or Bob Burdette's "The Rise and Fall of the Moustache" is the better.

At another time, and in a different mood, we revel in Wendell Phillips' "Lost Arts," and attune our minds to Ian Maclaren's "Scottish Trails"—truly a varied feast of rare intellectual viands.

Be we grave or gay, these volumes contain much to the liking—a veritable argosy of riches.

We feel the grip of these men who have made men laugh or weep at will. We come to know them, to hear them, as it were, and as we become enraptured and catch the applause, the laughter, and the cries of "Hear! Hear!" we are with the man, and his audience is before us.

Blaine, the "plumed knight," speaks on "Garfield," and Hamilton Wright Mable tells of "Poe's Place in American Literature." With fine, broad view Cardinal Manning tells of the "Persecution of the Jews," and James Russell Lowell expounds "Democracy." President Eliot, of Harvard, in one of his most noted addresses, emphasizes the "Uses of Education for Business," and a few pages further on Gladstone, that great pillar of the British Empire, tells of "Modern Training for Life." Charles A. Dana discusses "Journalism," and Arthur Balfour "The Pleasures of Reading;" and so on, through volumes filled with the names of those who have spoken the greatest thoughts in the English tongue.

Hamilton Wright Mable

The Final Volume

(the tenth) is devoted to bright sayings, anecdotes, reminiscences and repartee. Every means which ingenuity could devise, and splendid resources make possible, has been employed to make this a collection that should be unprecedented. Wise, witty and pithy paragraphs make it one of the most interesting volumes of the Library. These are the stories of the Congressman and the Merchant, the Clergyman and the Physician, the Banker and the Diplomat—in fact, men of all callings, and they have run the gauntlet of a critical editorial inspection.

Especially success has been achieved in securing the best stories told in the Senate and the House of Representatives, by the most famous speakers of these two bodies.

The whole work is supplied with an extensive and complete analytical, subject, and concordance index, which makes it possible instantly to refer to any speaker or any topic, time or place.

Oliver Wendell Holmes

Classic and Popular Lectures

From the lecture platform masterful men have moulded and fashioned the thoughts and actions of our century. In these lectures we travel dark continents with Stanley, and delve into "The Beginning of Things" with Agassiz. We sit with Carlyle's "Mahomet," and listen to the side-splitting farce of Artemus Ward while "With the Mormons." We wander through "Westminster Abbey" with Charles Kingsley, and delight in the piquancies of Andrew Lang's "How to Fail in Literature." We hear Ruskin idealize "Work," and we gain a larger view through Beecher's "The Reign of the Common People," and Robert Collyer's "Clear Grit."

Ian Maclaren

Great Addresses

Under this head "Modern Eloquence" contains an unique collection of great addresses by men whose position and achievements have given their utterances the weight of authority—men of superb ability and trenchant power.

There are considerably over one hundred of these addresses, each totally different from the other, but with the connecting link of masterful treatment and warm human interest. For instance, we have Phillips Brooks' on "The Character of Abraham Lincoln;" and Rufus Choate's immortal epic "On the Death of Daniel Webster." We have Henry VanDyke's "Books, Literature and People" and Cardinal Gibbons' "Supremacy of the Catholic Religion," and beside Newell Dwight Hillis' "The Pulpit in Modern Life" stands Henry Irving's "The Character of Macbeth."

A large portfolio, containing 11 sample full-page photogravures and chromatic plates, and 80 specimen pages of brilliant After-Dinner Speeches, Lectures, Addresses, Anecdotes, etc., also price and terms, will be sent on request.

Use attached Coupon.

JOHN D. MORRIS & COMPANY
1101 Chestnut Street Philadelphia, Pa.

INQUIRY COUPON

John D. Morris & Company, 1101 Chestnut St., Philadelphia

GENTLEMEN:—Referring to your advertisement of Hon. Thos. B. Reed's Library of Modern Eloquence in THE LITERARY DIGEST I will be pleased to receive portfolio of sample pages, photogravures and chromatic plates; also full particulars regarding bindings, prices, terms, etc.

L. D. 12-14

NAME

OCCUPATION

STREET

CITY AND STATE

Readers of THE LITERARY DIGEST are asked to mention the publication when writing to advertisers.

The Walter Sanitarium

with its new additions and greatly increased facilities, offers exceptional advantages for the winter treatment of invalids. Our prices are very moderate, and our location is the very best. We are prepared to more than compete with anything in our line.

This is not an experiment. For more than forty years we have been engaged in either personal or professional employment of sanatory methods in the treatment of the sick, and our Sanitarium is the immediate product of our work. This is the original home of the Massage treatment, now everywhere adopted. Baths, Swedish-Movements, Electricity in all forms, are employed with great success. Illustrated catalogue free.

Address ROBT WALTER, Walter's Park, Pa.

"A Knock at the Door"

By CHARLES DANA GIBSON

"A KNOCK AT THE DOOR" is a picture of an episode in the life of two lovers. The two figures are drawn in Mr. Gibson's most characteristic style.

LIFE PUBLISHING CO., - 22 West 31st Street, New York

It is specially printed by hand on imported Japan paper, 11 x 11, and is matted ready for framing.

Each proof is signed personally by Mr. Gibson.

You can secure the signed proof only by sending $5.00 for a new subscription to LIFE for one year. The drawing will not be sold or reprinted. It is for the exclusive ownership of our subscribers. At the expiration of this offer the plate will be destroyed.

New subscribers will receive for five dollars a year's subscription to LIFE and the signed proof, which can be secured in no other way.

DIGESTS WANTED.

For back numbers of Volume 1, for January 6, 1894, March 24, and December 22, 1900, and indexes for Volumes 3, 7, 8, 9, 12, 16 and 18, forwarded to us at once, we will pay 20 cents per copy. Publishers THE LITERARY DIGEST, 30 Lafayette Place, New York City.

High Class Canvassing Agents

Wanted to work exclusive territory in the sale of "The Standard Dictionary, Cyclopedia, and Atlas of the World" on salary and commission basis. Only A1 men who are willing to make a thorough canvass need apply. Address FUNK & WAGNALLS COMPANY, 30 Lafayette Place, New York City.

Readers of THE LITERARY DIGEST are asked to mention the publication when writing to advertisers.

How Shall We Improve Social Conditions ?

Never before was there greater interest in all important social problems. All the light of expert research is now needed. Here are some useful books for students of Sociology, Political Economy, Coinage, Economics, Trusts, Regulation of the Saloon, etc.

"The Encyclopedia of Social Reforms" is an indispensable work for every person interested in sociological or economic subjects. Its title is somewhat misleading. It treats not only every phase of sociology, but also every other related subject such as Political Economy, Capital, Industry, Education, etc.

Every Social Worker Must Have This

Leading authorities in all the various schools of social thought have presented their various claims, so that the reader is left to judge for himself. So eminent an authority as Benjamin Kidd says he is "struck with its excellence and completeness." 8vo, 1,447 pp. Cloth, $7.50; Sheep, $9.50; Half Morocco, $12; Morocco, $14.

Practical and vigorous talks on Civil Service, The Christian Voter, Immigration, Liquor Traffic, Social Evil, The American Sunday, Gambling, etc., are included in Dr. Carlos Martyn's book

Plain Talks On The Duties of Citizenship

"Christian Citizenship" of which The Northern Christian Advocate says: "It is surprisingly comprehensive and delightfully original." 75 cts.

One of the most convenient little books for the sociological student is "The Handbook of Currency and Wealth," compiled by George B. Waldron, and presenting ing accurate statistics on coinage, wages, population, trusts, strikes, votes, production, etc., etc. Flexible cloth, 50 cts.; leather $1.00. Bradstreet's, New York, says it is "one of the most convenient statistical presentations with which we are acquainted."

A Pocket Encyclopedia on Money

The Principles of political economy in their various and important applications to the Liquor

Practical Facts On Liquor Selling

Traffic are ably treated in "Wealth and Waste" by A. A. Hopkins, Ph.D. Says The Christian Herald: "Dr. Hopkins contributes to the literature of political economy a volume worth the attention of students and thinkers." Cloth, $1.00.

Two helpful volumes considering Sociology from the Christian standpoint will be found in "Social Christianity," by Rev. Hugh Price Hughes, M.A.

Sociology from Christian Standpoints

8vo, cloth, $1.40, and "Practical Christian Sociology" by Wilbur F. Crafts, Ph.D. 12mo, cloth, $1.50. The first contains twenty sermons; the second embraces lectures delivered before Princeton Theological Seminary.

All the above books postpaid. Published by Funk & Wagnalls Company, New York.

We Will Pay You A DOLLAR A DAY FOR LIFE!

For securing the greatest number of annual subscriptions, at one dollar, to

PEARSON'S MAGAZINE

before December 1, 1902, besides paying well for your time. This is the largest prize ever offered in the world for work which need not interfere with your regular occupation. If you will examine the following table, opposite your present age, you will see the sum we must pay you, if you win the Life Annuity Prize.

CALCULATION BASED UPON EXPECTATION OF LIFE ACCORDING TO LIFE INSURANCE TABLES

AGE.	EXPECTATION OF LIFE.	YOU WILL RECEIVE.	AGE.	EXPECTATION OF LIFE.	YOU WILL RECEIVE.	AGE.	EXPECTATION OF LIFE.	YOU WILL RECEIVE.
15	45.50	$16,607	31	34.63	$12,639	46	23.81	$8,690
16	44.85	16,370	32	33.93	12,384	47	23.08	8,424
17	44.19	16,129	33	33.21	12,121	48	22.36	8,161
18	43.53	15,888	34	32.50	11,862	49	21.63	7,894
19	42.87	15,647	35	31.78	11,599	50	20.91	7,632
20	42.20	15,403	36	31.07	11,340	51	20.20	7,373
21	41.53	15,158	37	30.35	11,077	52	19.49	7,113
22	40.85	14,910	38	29.62	10,811	53	18.79	6,858
23	40.17	14,662	39	28.90	10,548	54	18.09	6,602
24	39.49	14,413	40	28.18	10,285	55	17.40	6,351
25	38.81	14,165	41	27.45	10,019	56	16.72	6,102
26	38.12	13,913	42	26.72	9,752	57	16.05	5,858
27	37.43	13,661	43	26.00	9,490	58	15.39	5,617
28	36.73	13,406	44	25.27	9,223	59	14.74	5,380
29	36.03	13,150	45	24.54	8,957	60	14.10	5,146
30	35.33	12,895

PEARSON'S, with its over 200,000 circulation, has earned the banner record, for a 3-year old magazine, only by giving the biggest dollar's worth in the publication field. Rider Haggard's new serial begins in July. To simply show PEARSON'S is to secure an order in the great majority of cases. Remember, whether you win any of these Big Prizes or not, we pay you a generous percentage of every subscription you send us. A dollar a day for life for the best results—that's it!

2d PRIZE

A DOLLAR A DAY
FOR 5 YRS.

For the Second largest list
of Subscribers

CASH VALUE, $1,825

3d PRIZE

A DOLLAR A DAY
FOR 3 YRS.

For the Third largest list
of Subscribers

CASH VALUE, $1,095

4th PRIZE

A DOLLAR A DAY
FOR 2 YRS.

For the Fourth largest list
of Subscribers

CASH VALUE, $730

The amounts will be paid monthly, quarterly or annually, as may be desired. Agents Wanted—Now! Ambitious workers of any age who want to make good money now, and a secure provision for their old age should write us to-day for full particulars and territory. Give local references. Newsdealers are specially urged to enter this competition. Sample Copies and Subscription Blanks furnished.

THE PEARSON PUBLISHING COMPANY

43-45 East 19th Street, New York

MAKERS OF HAPPY HOMES

Practical guides whose counsels light the way toward the highest ideals of Womanhood, Marriage and Successful Homemaking.

★ ★ ★ The Integrity of the Marriage Bond

"Almost like a voice from heaven," is the way a critic characterizes "The Ethics of Marriage," by H. S. Pomeroy, M.D. It deals with all vital questions of married life. It is an earnest help toward the integrity, purity, and happiness of married life.
12mo, cloth, $1.00

★ ★ ★ Motherly Wisdom For Every Daughter

"Every sensible mother will wish to place this book in her daughter's hands," is the way The School Journal speaks of Mary J. Studley's "What Our Girls Ought to Know." The author's talks include almost every subject of importance to a girl's life.
12mo, cloth, $1.00

★ ★ ★ The Highest Ideals Of True Motherhood

"At the close of the first chapter I was ready to pronounce it as beautiful in diction as in appearance, and at the close of the second chapter I was smiling through my tears," writes Mrs. Clinton Smith of the W. C. T. U., of "True Motherhood" by James C. Fernald.
12mo, leatherette, 60 cts.

★ ★ ★ Self Help for All Young Women

"Crowded with wise counsels," says Frances Power Cobbe of Frances Willard's "How to Win," a book of heart-to-heart talks to girls by one who knew and loved them so well.
12mo, cloth, $1.00
Another book dealing with the practical side of a girl's life is Grace H. Dodge's "A Bundle of Letters to Busy Girls."
Cloth, 50 cts.; gift edition, 75 cts.

Sent Postpaid to any Address on Receipt of Price

FUNK & WAGNALLS COMPANY
Publishers New York

AN EVER-CONSTANT HELP FOR THE DESK

"Superior to any other treatise on the same theme, and must be regarded as indispensable to the ready-reference libraries of educators and writers."—Northern Christian Advocate.

Just the Right Word

To make the desired meaning clear and exact.
To make a contrast sharp and strong.
Also the correct use of Prepositions shown by illustrative examples and handy exercises in the accurate use of words.

"There is no other book yet offered which is its equal in imparting a mastery of words."—President Cochran, Brooklyn Polytechnic Institute.

English Synonyms Antonyms and Prepositions

By JAMES C. FERNALD

Over 7,500 Classified and Discriminated Synonyms; nearly 4,000 Classified Antonyms; Correct Use of Prepositions and Practical Helps for the Correct Use of Words—all handily arranged and instantly accessible.

President William F. Warren, Boston University: "If schools can find time for its study as a text-book, it will have a scope of usefulness not attained by preceding books."

Prof. William Hand Browne, Johns Hopkins University: "The best book of the time for class instruction that I have seen."

Prof. William Pettee, University of Michigan: "Its definitions and suggestions combine clearness and conciseness to a remarkable degree."

12mo, Cloth, 574 pages. Price, $1.50.

FUNK & WAGNALLS COMPANY, Pubs., NEW YORK

Divorce Laws of Every State at a Glance

New Edition, Revised to Date

Hirsh's Tabulated Digest OF THE Divorce Laws OF THE United States

BY HUGO HIRSH

Showing at a glance in tabulated form the divorce laws of every State in the Union. Attention is called to the fact that the laws which went into effect September 1st, 1901, in Arizona, and which go into effect January 1st, 1902, in the District of Columbia are embraced in this work.

Opinions from Eminent Authorities

Judge Michael H. Hirshberg, Supreme Court, Appellate Division, Brooklyn, N. Y.: "The scheme is unique, the design comprehensive, the execution accurate, and the result a clear and complete exposition at a glance of the essence of all the divorce laws of all the states and territories. It must be useful to all who are interested in the question of the marriage statute, professionally or philosophically."

Rufus William Peckham, Justice United States Supreme Court: "It bears the marks of great research and labor. . . . It can not but prove a great saving of time and trouble in an investigation of such laws whenever that becomes necessary."

The Sun, New York: "A most valuable compendium. It is clearly arranged and lucidly presented. Everybody who wants to get a divorce, and every lawyer who wants to get divorces for others, will have to have it."

Folding Chart, Cloth Cover. $1.50, net.
By Mail, $1.53

FUNK & WAGNALLS CO., Publishers, New York

"A Rich Library of Thought—A Treasure of Great Value."

"This entire volume is a thesaurus of wise utterances. Jefferson's was a philosophic mind, judicial, penetrating, just. Here is a rich library of thought, worth reading, studying and becoming saturated with. The book is a treasure of great value."—Michigan Christian Advocate, Detroit.

THE JEFFERSONIAN CYCLOPEDIA

EDITED BY JOHN P. FOLEY

Including the important writings and utterances of Thomas Jefferson, conveniently arranged under topics in alphabetical order and thoroughly indexed. The Cyclopedia contains 9,228 extracts, besides an appendix containing a number of valuable historical documents. The volume also contains ten illustrations, a chronology of Jefferson's life, etc. Each paragraph is numbered and headed with full-face type, and the precise source of the extract is indicated in every case.

"A Model of Selection and Classification—Jefferson's Noblest Thoughts, Most Convincing Arguments."

"An invaluable work to the student and general reader. If restricted to but one book besides the Bible and Shakespeare I would make choice of this."—J. Stoddard Johnston, in Louisville Courier-Journal.

"The cyclopedia is a model of selection and classification, and can be heartily commended. His noblest thoughts and most convincing arguments will be found in this volume."—The Sun, Baltimore.

"An invaluable guide to the voter, and if read carefully there will be procured a knowledge far superior to what may be obtained through controversy."—Financial Bulletin, Philadelphia.

"Altogether it is such a presentation of the thoughts of Jefferson as we remember to have been equalled in the case of no other person outside of sacred history."—The Buffalo Express.

"The Cyclopedia could not have been more timely."—Bookseller, Newsdealer and Stationer, New York.

"A complete and very valuable arrangement of Jeffersonian doctrine arranged so as to make it extremely convenient for consultation."—Commercial Advertiser, New York.

"The Jeffersonian Cyclopedia will prove acceptable to students of social philosophy and politics."—The New York Herald.

With ten illustrations. The frontispiece is a photogravure from the portrait of Jefferson painted by Gilbert Stuart in 1800. There is also a photogravure of Monticello, Jefferson's home, besides 8 wood-engraved half-tones from celebrated portraits and statues of Jefferson.

Price, carriage prepaid, Cloth, $7.50; Sheep, $10; Half Morocco, $12.50; Full Morocco, $15.00. Sold by Subscription. Agents Wanted.

FUNK & WAGNALLS COMPANY, Publishers, 30 Lafayette Place, NEW YORK

"TARRY THOU TILL I COME" SCORES HEAVILY

CLERGYMEN EVERYWHERE GREATLY AROUSED

Preaching Sermons About It, Putting It in Public Libraries, Forming Reading Circles to Study It, Urging Their Congregations to Buy It and Put It in the Hands of the Young, etc., etc.

Fighting Fire with Fire: the sensational, bad novel, | Below we give extracts from a flood of commend- with a great, good novel. Interest spreading everywhere | atory letters. They are taken almost at random:

Many Sermons Suggested by the Book.

Rev. WM. J. BARNES, Ph.B., Brooklyn, N. Y.: No matter how much opposed to works of fiction a minister may be, he can not fail to be captured by the graphic portrayal of the experiences through which Salathiel passed; nor would he have any qualms of conscience in commending the work to his people. I intend to preach a sermon or sermons from it.

Rev. M. A. PEDERSON, Chicago, Ill.: The introduction and appendix were especially useful to me in preparing a sermon on the second coming of Christ.

Rev. HOMER A. FLINT, Pittsburg, Pa.: I shall make this book the basis of a public discourse to my congregation.

Rev. CHAS. D. BLAKER, Lake City, Minn.: I can not fully express my admiration of this work. The title alone has suggested to me a subject for a sermon.

Rev. E. H. MACEY, Newport, R. I.: It is certainly invaluable as an historical novel. Remarkable for its rapid and splendid diction. Please send some circulars concerning it that I may place in the pews next Sunday, when I shall speak of it in connection with a sermon on reading.

Preachers Forming Reading Circles to Read and Study It.

Rev. ROLAND D. SAWYER, South Hanson, Mass.: Have commended the story from the pulpit and urged the plan of neighborhoods forming a round table circle and reading it. Our town library will purchase two or more copies of it.

Rev. H. A. BENFER, First United Congregational Church, Carlisle, Pa.: It will prove a blessing to the reading age. It's a most fascinating story. Will urge our Christian Endeavors to read it.

Rev. WM. T. PARSONS, Binghamton, N. Y.: The annotations materially add to its value and the book is beneficial reading, especially for the young, for their needs is great. I have recommended it to my congregation and have advised my Young People's Bible class to get it. I intend to use part of it in my sermon next Sunday night.

A Great Educational Book.

R. HEBER NEWTON, D.D., New York City: I have read with the keenest enjoyment the very brilliant and wise introductory essay on the coming of Christ in "Tarry Thou Till I Come." I think this essay is a masterpiece of work. It ought to have a great educational value.

The chain of testimony at the close of the volume from Jewish authorities as to the character and work of Jesus, is immensely interesting and valuable. It seems to me that this ought to see the light in a dainty edition de luxe by itself. It was a very happy thought to solicit such testimony. It brings to light the wonderful change that is going on in the attitude of spiritually minded Israel toward Jesus. I am persuaded that nothing has hindered this work of reverent appreciation more than the abominable attitude of the Church toward Judaism. I think it of the utmost value that Jews should have brought forth such evidence of the feelings on the part of the sons of Israel toward their Greatest and their Highest. It shall help the coming in of the better day, when there shall be one flock under one shepherd.

Rev. W. C. HALL, Morris Run, Pa.: Its pages are flaming torches of fire, diffusing light and warmth which arouses in the reader an intense feeling of charity and sympathy for the much-despised and rejected Jewish race.

Rev. A. W. ROSS, Mt. Morris, Ill.: Very attractive and fascinating book. Introduction and appendix alone worth the price of the book. Pure, clean, and instructive.

S. PARKES CADMAN, D.D., Brooklyn: I believe such works arouse our interest in the living Christ and God.

Clergymen Having It Placed in Public Libraries.

Rev. C. W. LEITZEL, Newton, Iowa: It is undoubtedly the best novel it has been my pleasure to read. The diction is elegant and the descriptions are simply grand. I am recommending it to my people and will see that the public library gets a copy.

Rev. C. W. MAGGART, Cedar Rapids, Iowa: Will advise the city libraries to place copies on their shelves, and reading circles to read it in course. It gives us a new interest in that somewhat hidden time and will help us in Bible interpretation.

A Great Historical Romance—"The Equal of 'Ben Hur.'"

Rev. W. N. SHERWOOD, Lawtonia, Md.: Have read it with great care and burning interest. I predict it will be one of the greatest historical romances, not only of the twentieth century, but of all time. Shall get up a sermon on it. It is the equal of "Ben Hur."

S. A. ORT, D.D., Springfield, Ohio: It is certainly a rare book of the kind that should be read generally. The stuff which is put out in these days in the name of fiction, with few exceptions, isn't worth the paper it is printed on. I have read lately several of what are called the popular novels of the day, and to my mind the reading of them is worse than time lost.

WILLIAM V. KELLEY, D.D., Editor Methodist Review: A brilliant, great book, produced in superb style.

Every Christian Home Should Have It:

Rev. JAMES J. MOFFITT, Waterville, Conn.: It should be in the home of every Christian family.

Rev. L. D. ADAMS, Mt. Alban, Pa.: Anything that will lead to the study of what Jesus has said rather than to what men have thought about Him, can only do good. This book will, I believe, do just that.

An All-Around Great Book.

Rev. A. A. MAINWARING, D.D., First Baptist Church, Flushing, Mich.: It is admirable. . . . Replete with annotations and finely illustrated.

Rev. E. J. BUTLER, Eagle Mills, N. Y.: When I sent for this book I expected something extra good, but it far surpasses my expectations.

Rev. JONATHAN WOOD, Bloomingdale, Mich.: I do not believe too much can be said in its praise.

Every mail brings orders from representatives of almost every religious faith—Protestant, Catholic, Jewish. A New York City Catholic priest sends for 12 copies for Christmas presents.

20 Full-page Illustrations by T. de Thulstrup.

12mo, Cloth, 622 Pages. Price, $1.40, net. All Bookstores. Postage, 10 cts. Holiday Edition de luxe, two vols., in box, 16 Photogravures. Price, $4.00, net. Postage, 30 cts.

Orders sent at once will receive immediate attention, so that the book will reach you in time for Christmas.

FUNK & WAGNALLS COMPANY, Publishers, - - 30 Lafayette Place, New York

HELPS TOWARD THE MOST EFFECTIVE PUBLIC SPEAKING

New Methods for Acquiring Effective Elocution

THE ESSENTIALS OF ELOCUTION

Novel ways by which to perfect every gesture and articulation to that high degree of art where the art itself is concealed and the hearer is made oblivious of everything but the sentiments uttered by the speaker. These talks are radical departures from old-time methods. By ALFRED AYKES, Author of "The Orthoepist," "The Verbalist," etc., etc. 16mo, Cloth. 75 cents.

The Lutheran Observer: "It is worth more than all the ponderous philosophies on the subject."

Perfection of Voice, Gesture, and Bearing

THE DRILL BOOK IN VOCAL CULTURE

A comprehensive study of the fundamental constituents of effective, graceful speaking. Heartily commended by the highest authorities. The book contains several illustrative diagrams. It is the result of wide reading, careful study, and practical experience. By EDWARD P. THWING, M.D., Ph.D., Author of "A Handbook of Illustrations," "Outdoor Life in Europe," etc. 16mo, Paper. 25 cents.

The Independent, New York: "Compact and inexpensive, but it omits nothing essential."

How to Reach, Move, and Influence an Audience

BEFORE AN AUDIENCE

This is not a book on elocution, but treats, in a new and original way, public speaking. The author devotes particular attention to the use of the will in public speaking, and emphasizes creative rather than imitative speaking. It contains many interesting facts and illustrations. By NATHAN SHEPPARD, Compiler "The Dickens Reader," "Character Reading from George Eliot," etc. 12mo, Cloth. 75 cents.

The Literary World, Boston: "We advise every public speaker to read at least the opening chapter of this book; the rest will follow."

The Best Selections for Platform Delivery

BELL'S STANDARD ELOCUTIONIST

Principles and exercises, followed by a copious selection of extracts in prose and poetry, classified and adapted for reading and recitations, from ancient and modern eloquence. For senior and junior pupils and students. Revised edition, 188th thousand. By Prof. CHAS. BELL and ALEXANDER M. BELL, F.E.L.S., Late Lecturer in University College, London. 12mo, Cloth. $1.50.

Prof. T. C. Trueblood, Department of Literature, Science, and the Arts, University of Michigan, Ann Arbor, Mich.: "It is standard, and contains many valuable hints and exercises."

FUNK & WAGNALLS COMPANY, Publishers, 30 Lafayette Place, NEW YORK

Readers of THE LITERARY DIGEST are asked to mention the publication when writing to advertisers.

THE LITERARY DIGEST

FOR CHARLIE'S SAKE

AND OTHER LYRICS AND BALLADS, including The Maryland Battalion, Theodosia Burr, The Christmas Child, Stonewall Jackson's Way, A Ballad of Injun Ink, etc., etc. By JOHN WILLIAMSON PALMER. 12mo, cloth, deckle edges, gilt top. Price $1.00 net. Postage 7 cts.

"The ballads have all the ringing movement of Mr. Kipling's best work, and they are charged with an unmistakable sincerity."—N. Y. Times.

STORIES IN RHYME FOR HOLIDAY TIME

A charming gift book for young folks. By EDWARD JEWITT WHEELER. 29 drawings by Walter Satterlee. 4to, ornamental cover. $1.00.

"Bright, musical, and entertaining."—The Independent, New York.

Funk & Wagnalls Company, Publishers, New York

THE TRANSFIGURATION OF MISS PHILURA

An entertaining story woven around the "New Thought," which is finding expression in Christian Science, Divine Healing. By FLORENCE MORSE KINGSLEY. Ornamental cover. Frontispiece. Price 60 cents net. Postage 3 cts.

"It is a dainty little story, and quite out of the common."—Daily Evening Telegraph, Phila.

TRUE STORIES OF HEROIC LIVES

Thirty-nine true stories of courage and devotion, gathered from all quarters of the world. By LOUIS ALBERT BANKS, D.D. 12mo, cloth, cover design, half-tone illustrations. Price $1.00.

"Most of the deeds told about are of thrilling dramatic interest, and the book will be welcome in whatever hands it falls."—Boston Times.

Funk & Wagnalls Company, Publishers, New York

IN DEEP ABYSS

A Thrilling Story. By GEORGES OHNET. 12mo, cloth, 421 pages. Price $1.30 net. Postage 13 cts.

"No work in recent years surpasses this story in intense dramatic interest. Though often to the highest degree sensational, it is never commonplace, which is a combination of traits very rare in this sort of literature. The scenes are dashing and picturesque."—The Springfield Union.

ONE OF THOSE COINCIDENCES

And other stories. By JULIAN HAWTHORNE, and others. There are tales of soldiers, singers, ghosts, and other entertaining subjects. Illustrated. 12mo, cloth, cover design. Price $1.00.

"The reader can safely pick out any tale at random and be certain of an intellectual feast."—The Standard Union, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Funk & Wagnalls Company, Publishers, New York

For Travelers, Art Lovers, and Others

"It is almost as good as a trip to Paris."

The Real Latin Quarter of Paris

BY F. BERKELEY SMITH

Racy sketches and charming glimpses of that most fascinating Bohemia of gay Paris, with its artists, studios, models, grisettes, balls, cafes, shops, gardens, etc., etc.

There are about 100 original drawings and camera snap shots by the author, two caricatures in color by the celebrated French caricaturist Sancha, and a water-color frontispiece by F. HOPKINSON SMITH.

Price, $1.20 net, Postage 13 cents

Price, $1.20 net, Postage 12 cents

"The opening chapters are to me a perfect delight; the first scene is simply superb, and the heroine is one of the sweetest, truest, and most living characters that I have met."—Rev. Minot J. Savage.

King Midas

BY UPTON SINCLAIR

An American story of to-day which has won extraordinary praise from many of the ablest critics. Edwin Markham says: "The pages are touched throughout with the hues of poetry and the noblest ideals of life." Four full-page original drawings by C. M. Relyea. Special cover design.

A Powerful American Novel of To-day

A Graceful Romance for Novel Readers

"Far excels many loudly heralded books of the day."

The Princess Cynthia

BY MARGUERITE BRYANT

A stirring tale of love and military adventure in a mythical Kingdom of the Old World. The style is bright and vivacious, the characters are finely portrayed, and the glamour of high romance as well as the charm of realism rests on the story from the first line to the last.

There are four full-page half-tone illustrations by George R. Havelka. Handsome cover design in four colors. A capital gift book.

Price, $1.20 net, Postage 12 cents

Price, $1.20 net, Postage 13 cents

"No work in recent years surpasses this story in intense dramatic interest. The characters are well drawn, and the scenes, which follow rapidly, are all dashing and picturesque."—The Springfield Union.

In Deep Abyss

BY GEORGES OHNET

An absorbing story of love and intrigue, by the author of "The Ironmaster." Translated from the French by Fred Rothwell, B.A. It is full of mystery, passion, and action. The scenes are laid in Paris, London, San Francisco, and the convict-station at New Caledonia.

A Great French Author's Latest Novel

CHRISTMAS BOOKS

"One of the greatest historical novels of the world" —EDWIN MARKHAM

GEORGE CROLY'S

Barry Thou Till I Come

HOLIDAY EDITION

"There is nothing like it in all literature. It is sublime" —HUBERT H. BANCROFT.

Holiday Edn. 2 vols. $4 net; postage 31 c. Popular Edn. $1.40 net; postage 19 c.

FUNK & WAGNALLS COMPANY

AT ALL BOOKSTORES

Publishers, NEW YORK

AT ALL BOOKSTORES

STARS OF THE OPERA

Descriptive sketches of the leading operas, and personal chats with the leading opera prima donnas. By MABEL WAGNALLS. 12mo, cloth, deckle edges, with exquisite half-tone portraits of the great singers. Price, $1.50.

"The chapters devoted to the human side of the artists are full of charm, and cause the reader to feel that he almost has a personal acquaintance with these stars of the opera."—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

SONG STORIES FOR LITTLE PEOPLE

218 capital stories for young folks. Edited by W. H. LUCKENBACH. 12mo, large type. $1.00.

DICKENS'S CHRISTMAS STORIES

8vo, cloth, 270 pp. Price 75 cents.

Funk & Wagnalls Company, Publishers, New York

ARCHIBALD MALMAISON

This story has been pronounced the best of all the author's productions. By JULIAN HAWTHORNE. 12mo, cloth, ornamental cover. Illustrations by F. A. Carter. Price, $1.25.

"A weird story of marked individuality, dramatic and intensely exciting."—Herald, Cleveland.

MY MUSICAL MEMORIES

A volume of personal reminiscences, dealing with early life and recollections, hearing music, old violins, Paganini, Wagner, Liszt. By H. R. HAWES, A.M. 12mo, ornamental cover. Price, $1.50.

"It is full of history and art, of genius and inspiration."—The Advance, Chicago.

Funk & Wagnalls Company, Publishers, New York

POEMS BY RICHARD REALF

Over one hundred and fifty stirring lyrics and songs and sonnets. There are spirited songs of war and tender poems of love and pathos. 12mo, cloth, 345 pp., deckle edges, gilt top, cover design. Price $2.50.

"The most considerable addition to American poetry that has appeared in recent years."—The Argonaut, San Francisco.

HERO TALES FROM SACRED STORY

The Old Bible heroes made to live again and do heroic deeds before the reader. By LOUIS ALBERT BANKS, D.D. Elegantly bound. Nineteen full-page illustrations. 12mo, cloth, $1.50.

"Many timely lessons of honor and faith, of fidelity and worth."—Bishop J. F. Hearst.

Funk & Wagnalls Company, Publishers, New York

Readers of THE LITERARY DIGEST are asked to mention the publication when writing to advertisers.

The Literary Digest

VOL. XXIII., No. 24

NEW YORK, DECEMBER 14, 1901.

WHOLE NUMBER, 608

Published Weekly by

FUNK & WAGNALLS COMPANY,

30 Lafayette Place, New York.

44 Fleet Street, London.

Entered at New York Post-Office as Second-Class Matter.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

PRICE.—Per year, in advance, $3.00; four months, on trial, $1.00; single copies, 10 cents.

RECEIPT and credit of payment is shown in about two weeks by the date on the address label attached to each paper.

POST-OFFICE ADDRESS.—Instructions concerning renewal, discontinuance, or change of address should be sent two weeks prior to the date they are to go into effect. The exact post-office address to which we are directing paper at time of writing must always be given.

DISCONTINUANCES.—We find that a large majority of our subscribers prefer not to have their subscriptions interrupted and their files broken in case they fail to remit before expiration. It is therefore assumed, unless notification to discontinue is received, that the subscriber wishes no interruption in his series. Notification to discontinue at expiration can be sent in at any time during the year.

PRESENTATION COPIES.—Many persons subscribe for friends, intending that the paper shall stop at the end of the year. If instructions are given to this effect, they will receive attention at the proper time.

TOPICS OF THE DAY.

THE ISSUES RAISED IN THE PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

IT is hard to tell from the comments of the newspapers just what sort of a message they expected from President Roosevelt, but it is clear that some of them expected something considerably different from the one that was written. The Philadelphia Inquirer (Rep.) remarks that "it is not exactly the kind of a message that it was natural to expect from a man of Mr. Roosevelt's temperament," and the Boston Herald (Ind.) says it is "less a unique document than, perhaps, many have anticipated it would be." It is "anything but a sensational document," observes the Baltimore News (Ind.). The Providence Journal (Ind.) thinks it a notable matter that "there is not a line of bumptiousness or challenging boastfulness" in the message, and the Chicago Journal (Ind.) says that "the country will draw a deep breath of satisfaction" because "there are no fireworks in it." "The 'Rough Rider' and 'the Jingo,' the impetuous youth of a year ago, has disappeared," remarks the New York Evening Post (Ind.), "and instead we have in the White House a President who, to judge from his first communication to Congress, might be a man of sixty, trained in conservative habits." The message as a whole is pretty generally commended by the papers of both parties.

The salient points of the message may be briefly given as follows:

President McKinley's assassination is dwelt upon at some length, and attention is called to the fact that "of the last seven elected Presidents, he is the third who has been murdered, and the bare recital of this fact," it is added, "is sufficient to justify grave alarm among all loyal American citizens." Anarchy is called "a crime against the whole human race," and it is urged that this crime "should be made an offense against the law of nations," like piracy and the slave trade.

"Caution in dealing with corporations" is recommended; yet it is recognized that "there is a widespread conviction in the minds of the American people that the great corporations known as trusts are in certain of their features and tendencies hurtful to the general welfare." It is urged that "combination and concentration should be, not prohibited, but supervised and within reasonable limits controlled." "In the interest of the public, the Government should have the right to inspect and examine the workings of the great corporations engaged in interstate business. Publicity is the only sure remedy which we can now invoke."

"A cabinet officer, to be known as Secretary of Commerce and Industries," is recommended.

"The competition of convict contract labor in the open labor market" is deprecated, legislation "to render the enforcement of the eight-hour law easy and certain" is urged, and it is advised that "in all industries carried on directly or indirectly for the United States Government women and children should be protected from excessive hours of labor, from night work, and from work under unsanitary conditions."

The Chinese exclusion law should be reenacted immediately, and should be strengthened wherever necessary.

As to the tariff, "nothing could be more unwise than to disturb the business interests of the country by any general tariff change at this time"; but there should be combined with it "a supplementary system of reciprocal benefit and obligation with other nations." "Reciprocity must be treated as the handmaiden of protection."

A shipping subsidy is not outspokenly advocated, but it is remarked that "at present American shipping is under certain great disadvantages when put in competition with the shipping of foreign countries," and Congress is asked to "take such action as will remedy these inequalities."

Action that "will bring the revenues more nearly within the limit of our actual needs" is called for, and, at the same time, attention is called to "the need of strict economy in expenditures."

The preservation of the forests is urged as "an imperative business necessity," and the government irrigation of arid lands is recommended.

"In Cuba such progress has been made toward putting the independent government of the island upon a firm footing that before the present session of the Congress closes, this will be an accomplished fact." "A substantial reduction in the tariff duties on Cuban imports into the United States" is termed a "vital need."

Our Philippine policy is justified at considerable length, and legislation that will encourage the introduction of industrial enterprises is called for. A cable to Hawaii and the Philippines is recommended.

The isthmian canal and the importance of constructing it are discussed.

Many recommendations are made looking to the upbuilding of the navy. It is not considered necessary to increase the army, "but it is necessary to keep it at the highest point of efficiency." Promotions will be made for merit only; political, social, or personal pressure will avail nothing, "and if there is reason to believe that such pressure is exercised at the instigation of the officer concerned, it will be held to militate against him."

The merit system is declared to be "in its essence as democratic and American as the common-school system itself," and it is further declared that "it is important to have this system obtain at home, but it is even more important to have it applied rigidly in our insular possessions."

The elimination of "partizan considerations" from the consular service is urged, and the reformation of the service by a new law advised.

The census office "should be made a permanent government bureau."

Anarchism.—There is pretty general agreement with the President's recommendation that anarchists be outlawed, and a number of bills to this end have been introduced into Congress. The Brooklyn Standard-Union (Rep.) says of the part of the message dealing with this topic that "no more apt or enlightening analyzation of anarchy has been made anywhere in so few words or, for that matter, in any words, few or many." The Washington Times (Dem.) declares that "the United States is no dumping-ground for men who are murderers by conviction"; and it seems to the New York Tribune (Rep.) that "certainly there is need of world-wide cooperation against this mad foe to civilization." "There is excellent prospect," observes the New York Commercial Advertiser (Rep.), "that before the present session ends we shall have agreement upon some comprehensive measure, or measures, that will put us as a nation in line with the sentiment expressed by the President." Some papers think, however, that there will be some difficulty in distinguishing the anarchists and identifying them as such, and the New York Evening Post reports that the anarchists in New York are not expecting serious trouble.

WAITING FOR THE BIG SHOW TO OPEN.

—The St. Paul Pioneer Press.

The "Trusts."—The President's recommendation of publicity as a remedy for trust evils is widely commended. "His deliverance upon this subject," says the Rochester Post-Express (Rep.), "seems to us to be altogether the wisest that has been made by any public man." The Chicago Tribune (Rep.) calls the President's program "moderate and safe," and thinks that "Republicans and Democrats should be able to join hands with ease to legislate regarding it." The Wall Street Journal (Fin.) declares that under the present methods of trust management a few men "greatly increase their opportunities for profit by employing other people's money without feeling obligation to give those people information of changes in the business, except in the form of an annual report, issued some months after the close of the fiscal year," and it adds that "this sounds unfair and one-sided, but it is pretty near what happens." The masses of people will like this part of the message, thinks the Brooklyn Eagle (Ind.), because "they are determined not to let anything grow up in this country which they can not handle and which, unhandled, might become stronger than themselves." The New York Evening Post (Ind.) remarks that "the trust promoters will be wise if they offer no resistance to the steps which may be taken to carry out the President's suggestion," for "if they seek to oppose this conservative and wholesome recommendation, they will create a demand for something more drastic." The Post thinks, however, that "Congress is certain to be reluctant about taking action in this direction," and the Boston Transcript (Rep.) agrees that "if precedents count for anything, a Congress so near the election of its successor is likely to be cautious rather than radical." The fear is expressed by the Hartford Courant (Rep.) that federal meddling with corporations is only "another step toward the centralization that those profess to fear who are the strongest in pushing the country toward it. 'Government control' is a few steps ahead of government ownership, and is in the same path."

Chinese Exclusion.—On this question it seems likely, from the newspaper comment, that, as the Brooklyn Eagle says, "all parties will be a unit for the reenactment of the exclusion act." The Hartford Courant says: "There is a mighty strong lesson in inconsistency in a nation forcing its way into a country at the point of the bayonet and then forbidding the people of that country at the point of the bayonet from coming here. But on its practical side his declaration unquestionably voices the prevailing sentiment. The people of this country do not want to have to compete with the Chinese in diet or clothing or habits of life, and they will have to when the Chinese becomes an active competitor with them in work. That's the inside of the Chinese question. It is not taken from the Golden Rule, but is essentially selfish and human." The New York Journal of Commerce (Fin.), however, thinks that "the exclusion of the small number of Chinese who might come here is not necessary to preserve the American workman, whose products are everywhere underselling the wares of men who earn lower wages," and it remarks that "Chinese labor in this country has been found to be efficient, but not particularly cheap."

THEY HAVE A POOR OPINION OF THE MESSAGE.

—The Philadelphia Record.

The Tariff and Reciprocity.—"President Roosevelt's message has knocked in the head the free-trade scheme to reduce the Dingley tariff under the plea of making friends with or extending charity to other nations," says the New York Press (Rep.), which is the most ardent newspaper champion of the protective tariff system in the country; and it goes on to declare that the only foes of the system "are now, as heretofore, in the battered old Democracy. There dissatisfied Republicans can take their stand. With the President's position definitely and finally known, there is no more hope for sneaking into free trade by the new covered route of 'tariff revision' than there is by the old abandoned subway of 'tariff reform.'" The Boston Herald (Ind.), however, believes that the President's idea that business panics are created by tariff revisions is a fallacy, and the New York Times (Ind.) thinks that the President "misinterprets the evidence as to public opinion, and errs as to the real requisite to prosperity. That, we are convinced, is, not to continue protection as it exists, but gradually and prudently, but surely, to check and moderate it." The President's words on reciprocity are not considered as strong as his declaration concerning the tariff. His recommendation that reciprocity should be treated as the handmaiden of protection "does not mean much," remarks the Indianapolis News (Ind.); and the New York Journal (Dem.) thinks that "the President seems half-hearted" in this matter, and it says that "we can not help thinking that if McKinley had lived he would have spoken in more insistent terms on this subject that lay so near his heart." "The protected interests," notes the Baltimore News (Ind.), "are too jealous of any move in the direction of lowered duties to give their countenance to anything like a broad reciprocity policy; and the President virtually sanctions their position." The New York Journal of Commerce puts its conception of the situation in a sentence by saying: "We shall get no concessions without giving some, and what not a single American will object to no foreigner will value." The New York Tribune, however, indorses the reciprocity idea heartily, and says: "Certainly a policy with which the names of Blaine, McKinley, and Dingley have been identified may be regarded as soundly Republican, and the execution of it as not a 'new departure' nor an attack upon the established order of things."

Shipping Subsidies.—The idea of a shipping subsidy, like the idea of reciprocity, seems to be considered favorably as a general plan, but opposed when it becomes clear who will get the favors and who will not. The Chicago Journal (Ind.) thinks that "the repeal or modification of our antiquated navigation laws would do more to build up our merchant shipping than all the subsidies that can be piled up." And the New York Journal of Commerce says:

"It is not our merchant marine that seems so small; it is only the portion of it which is employed in foreign trade. That this is smaller than that of England is no more discreditable to us than it is discreditable to England that her railroad system is smaller than ours. A maritime nation with free trade has built up a great merchant marine; a continental nation with a stiff protective tariff to restrict foreign trade has developed a splendid railway system, and is selling railway material to the British empire. That we overtop other nations in other forms of business is due to the fact that our capital and labor have been employed where they are more productive than on the sea, and if our exports have been carried to their destinations in cheap vessels it has been to the profit of our producers, who receive the foreign price less the cost of transportation."

Irrigation of Arid Regions.—This subject is considered by the Atlanta Journal (Dem.) "the most important of all," and the Brooklyn Eagle notes that "it is absolutely new matter in any cause it would be equivalent to the opening of several new States, and the 'winning of the West' has, in the past fifty years, been the making of the East, because it has supplied a constantly widening market for the surplus products of older and better developed sections of the country."

On the other side of the question the Buffalo Express (Ind. Rep.) says: "The Government will have done enough if it regulates interstate waters. Let the settlers pay for their own improvements, as all other settlers have done." And the Baltimore American (Ind.) says:

"There is absolutely no analogy between the improvement of rivers and harbors and the irrigation of deserts. The one creates facilities for a commerce and trade already in existence, and is, therefore, a benefit to the whole people and the nation. The other undertakes to do an altogether hypothetical service for future generations—a service which they can be relied upon to do for themselves if convinced that it will pay. . . . When irrigation will pay, private enterprise will undertake it, and it has done so already with more or less profit. Of the lands which the Government is asked to irrigate, at least three-fourths of them would remain non-productive if the Amazon were emptied over them."

The Merit System.—The President's unequivocal indorsement of civil-service reform is heartily commended by the newspapers, but the Indianapolis Sentinel (Dem.) thinks if he lives up to it, "he will cause consternation among his party associates." The Buffalo Express, too, says that his words "will make many of the old bureaucrats quake," and the Hartford Times (Ind. Dem.) remarks that "this feature of the message can not be pleasing to the politicians who found Mr. McKinley so complaisant, but it should please the American people mightily." "By carrying out this principle," says the New York World (Ind. Dem.), "as in justice it must be said that Mr. Roosevelt has done in executing the civil-service laws heretofore, one of the greatest dangers of the expansion policy will be averted."

The Philippines.—The President's justification of our Philippine policy on the ground of its benefit to the natives brings out the same kind of comment brought out by similar declarations by President McKinley. The New York Press declares that "Senator Hoar himself could not entertain or express more humane and nationally unselfish sentiments toward the Filipinos," while the Springfield Republican (Ind.) says: "As to future policy respecting the islands—no word. The President speaks of 'self-government' as the ultimate end, but just what he means no one can tell. And so the hell of mutually murderous hate we have created there is to continue indefinitely." The recommendation that Congress open the way for the introduction of business enterprises into the islands meets the opposition of

THE ROUGH RIDER: "Dance, you tenderfeet, dance!"
—The Philadelphia North American.

Presidential message," and says: "This alone would make the message notable. It will mark, we think, the especial achievement President Roosevelt means to stamp on his Administration." "Surely the West will like this message," remarks the Washington Star (Ind.), "and it is safe to say that if Mr. Roosevelt can induce Congress to lay the foundation for reservoirs which will husband for the great empire beyond the Mississippi the water necessary to add the desert reaches there to habitation and productivity, he need lose no sleep about the enduring quality of his fame." The Detroit Tribune (Ind.) says:

"He knows that, by the very presence and extent of these arid lands, the States that contain them are too poor to undertake, on an adequate scale, the projects of conservation and distribution of water-supply that are necessary. He realizes, too, that the manufacturing and merchandizing East has a direct interest in the development and settlement of this untenanted country, be-

"THE CYCLONE'S COMING!"
—The New York World.

the Richmond Dispatch (Dem.), which thinks it would merely be "turning loose an army of reconstruction-looters to prey upon the natives." Opportunely the Manila American arrives simultaneously with the message, with an editorial upon this very subject, in which it says:

"It will be the industrial army that redeems the Philippine Islands. Churches we have, and to spare; schools we are establishing, but these in themselves will be powerless to uplift the country. What these islands need is an army of intelligent and efficient workmen to till the soil, to fell, saw, and market timber, to exploit mines, to build railroads and canals and manufactories; in short, men who will do for the Philippines what Missouri did for itself—develop the latent resources, people the country and inaugurate an era of prosperity.

"There are now enough Americans interested in these islands, and most of them on the ground, to do this work, just so soon as Congress will give them the signal that their locations, their investments, and the result of their efforts will be protected as well as they would be in America."

CUBA'S PRESIDENTIAL CAMPAIGN.

CUBA will soon be in the throes of a national political campaign, and already the claims of contending candidates are being vigorously pushed in the press and on the platform. The elections will begin late in December and end in February. The governors of provinces will first be balloted for, then representatives to the Provincial Assemblies, and then deputies to the National House. The senatorial election comes next, and the Presidential contest last of all. Gen. Emilio Nunez, civil governor of Havana, in a letter to the New York Sun, reviewing the political situation in Cuba, declares:

"The crystallization of the leading policies has led to the formation of three parties—the National, the Republican, and the Democratic. The two latter names are fresh from the United States, and mean nothing in so far as the platforms of its two great parties are concerned.

"The Republican party comprises a fraction of the patriots who were active in the war against Spain; the Democrats are the survivors of the old Autonomist party, which supported Spain in the war for independence, declaring for allegiance to the mother country, with the privilege of home rule. Spaniards and the old Spanish sympathizers largely compose the Democratic organization.

"The National party—by far the strongest numerically—is made up of the Cubans who demanded absolute independence. Their platform is practically the same as that of the Republicans; indeed, the two parties are almost one.

"The difference is this: The leaders, and not the policies, have been opposed. The Assembly which followed the Spanish evacuation of the island was made up of patriots who, while they had the same end in view, favored different men.

"The National party organized and claimed General Gomez as its head. The Republicans comprised those who broke away on the question of leadership. General Gomez has proved his sincerity and unselfishness, and has won the hearts of all his countrymen. To-day he is by far the most popular man in Cuba.

"Several times he has refused the candidacy for the office of President. Should he remain firm in his determination, the choice of the National party will be Señor Tomas Estrada Palma.

He enjoys the confidence of General Gomez, and is high in the esteem of the people of the island.

"Not long ago I was informed that there was a fusion movement in his favor on foot in Havana. It was to comprise the National and Republican forces, and a fraction of the Democratic party.

"But, in some parts of the island, there has been an understanding between the Democratic and the Republican parties that they shall unite in the support of Gen. Bartolome Masso. General Masso is the head and front of what I might call the anti-Platt Cubans.

"He typifies the spirit of revision, which stirred so many when the Platt amendment was put through. Those of the patriots who could brook no interference in the island's affairs are still Revisionists—and anti-Platts."

General Nunez believes that Señor Palma will be elected, and declares that in the event of his election Palma would "endeavor to preserve cordial relations with the United States, and would seek to avoid all friction and to place on a sound basis the financial and commercial affairs of the island."

La Lucha (Havana) supports the candidacy of General Masso on the ground that he is the more distinctively Cuban candidate, and regards Señor Palma as being too American in his sympathies. It says:

"The popular and intellectual classes are showing their sympathy for a candidate who has specifically asked all the elements of the country for their support, and they have given it him in spite of the arguments used by the supporters of Don Tomas [Señor Palma] that the latter was the only man, that he spoke English, and was an American citizen and understood both the Cuban and American aspect of the problem.

"Señor Masso, in appealing directly and not in general terms to all the various divisions of the people, showed more common sense and less exclusivism than did Don Tomas, tho the trouble and division have arisen not so much from the wording of the letter program of Don Tomas as from the exclusiveness of the pampered bureaucrats of the intervention."

SEÑOR TOMAS ESTRADA PALMA.

GEN. BARTOLOME MASO.

CANDIDATES FOR THE PRESIDENCY OF CUBA.

Texas Strikes Another Blow at Trusts.—State attacks on trusts, which were greeted with trumpetings of newspaper acclaim from sea to sea a few years ago, now receive very little notice. The Chicago Tribune says of the latest attempt of this sort:

"The authorities in Texas have broken up the 'beer trust' in that State. St. Louis and Milwaukee brewing companies which have been violating the anti-trust act have been fined $15,000 apiece, and the right to do business in Texas has been taken away from them. These two companies have paid their fines, and the Milwaukee one is going to sell out its real-estate holdings in Texas, and will send no agents there to solicit custom. A year ago the Texas authorities succeeded in depriving of the right to do business in Texas the local corporation which represented the Standard Oil Company. It has now defeated a brewers' combine. These are indeed victories. No other State can show such a record. This is not so much that Texas has a rigid anti-trust law as it is because state officials think it can be and ought to be enforced. But while these two brewing companies can not do business in Texas, the Texans who like their beer can send to St. Louis or Milwaukee for it. Its shipment to them can not be prevented. Nor is it likely that beer will be any cheaper in Texas because of the expulsion of these two companies. In this case it will be difficult to see what Texas will have gained by this 'famous victory.' Some foreign capital which has been invested in the State will be withdrawn, but that will be no gain. Texas needs all the capital it can get."

NO COLOR LINE IN HAWAII.

ACCORDING to the Honolulu correspondent of the Boston Transcript, the color line is something that in Hawaii is absolutely unknown. "Black and white and yellow and brown," he says, "are on a social equality." The news of the Booker T. Washington dinner incident caused no stir there, where "American, Hawaiian, and negro sit down at the same table with Japanese and Chinese, and with never a thought of the proprieties." The social conditions, continues the correspondent, "are probably the most peculiar of anywhere in the United States," and he goes on to say:

"The Hawaiian has, it is true, a skin of somber hue, but the darker the color the prouder he is of his social status. There are innumerable wealthy natives here who move in the best society circles, and the issuance of the 'Blue Book,' for the first time, a few days ago, disclosed that the 'four hundred' of the city was made up of both black and white and yellow and brown.

"The most prominent attorney and the best speaker in the islands is a negro, and he is much in demand upon every public occasion. This is T. McCants Stewart, who is also prominent in the high councils of the Republican party, which is due not only to his own undoubted ability, but also because of his color, which gives him a powerful influence over the natives. There are four score at least of Chinese citizens, merchants, and the like, who move in the best society, and who are rated at anywhere from $100,000 to $3,000,000 when wealth is taken as a factor. The hospitality of the famous Ah Fong family is well known, particularly among army and navy officers, who have often been their guests.

"The Japanese are also no small factor in the prosperity of the islands, and there are many with large accumulations of wealth. There is not the slightest social distinction made upon their own account, tho they very rarely entertain. Among the Hawaiians, however, there is the greatest rivalry for social distinction. The Princess Theresa, who is the wife of Delegate to Congress Wilcox, by her official position, claims the honors. The ex-Queen Liliuokalani is still the recognized leader among her own people, and Mrs. Wilcox's claims are disputed by several other ladies. The Princess Theresa is the real leader of the Home Rule party, which is dominant in local politics, and is said to far exceed her husband, the delegate to Congress, in her ability to control the party.

"There are in all hardly more than ten thousand whites in the city of Honolulu, and a goodly part of that number is made up of transients, who can not be called citizens. The prominent society people are among the descendants of the old missionaries, and they mingle freely with the other nationalities in a social way. The social peculiarities of the place are further augmented by the unlimited number of queer marriage mixtures. A man's color here is no index to his nationality. Hawaiian, Chinese, American, French, Japanese, Portuguese, Spanish, and African blood are so intermingled that an attempt to accurately distinguish one from the other would be absolutely impossible."

MORE REFLECTIONS ON THE PHILIPPINE DECISION.

THE Supreme-Court decision in the "fourteen diamond rings case," which was considered in these columns last week, is accepted by the newspapers as confirming the insular decisions rendered last spring. "The opinion handed down by the Supreme Court in the last batch of insular cases," says the Burlington Hawkeye (Rep.), "completes the vindication of the McKinley policy of national expansion. The question of constitutionality will no longer be up for consideration. That has been settled once and for all, and settled rightly." The series of decisions "proclaim to the world," declares the Chicago Journal (Ind.), "that under the Constitution of the United States the American Government may rule its territorial possessions imperially and without the consent of the governed." The fact that Congress and the President, not the President alone, will rule our colonial possessions is the subject of considerable remark. Thus the New York World (Ind. Dem.) says: "Whatever disappointment some Americans may feel at the refusal of the Supreme Court to declare against the 'dependencies' system, let none overlook the fact that the encroachments of the executive branch, its attempt to make itself autocratic and irresponsible, have been sternly and squarely rebuked. On that proposition the Supreme Court stood eight to one. The inhabitants of our 'appurtenances'

A SUGGESTION FOR THE NEW PHILIPPINE COINAGE.

—The Chicago Record-Herald.

A BAD CASE OF SORE NECK.

—The Denver News.

UNCLE SAM IN TWO ROLES.

are not the wards of the President, but the wards of the people." And the Louisville Post (Dem.) observes:

"This decision, like the previous ones, is a check to the tendency toward the concentration of power in the executive branch of the Government. Our natural growth has made the Presidency an infinitely more powerful institution than the founders of the Government ever dreamed that it would be. Nearly every change, nearly every step forward, has necessarily increased the weight of executive influence until an adroit politician at the White House, under ordinary circumstances, can make himself practically supreme.

"Many intelligent and patriotic citizens have seen in our recent expansion the possibility of even a greater aggrandizement of the Presidency. If the President could, under the Constitution, be an absolute monarch of the island territory, there might be some justification for the cry of imperialism. But the Supreme Court holds that this cannot be. The power to govern territory lies in Congress, and not in the President. The direct representatives of the people must make the general laws for the government of the islands. Representatives of a people devoted to popular government can be relied upon to be liberal, and to do all in their power for the development of self-government in the Philippines.

"The cause of national growth is undoubtedly strengthened by these decisions that establish authority in the legislative rather than the executive branch of the Government."

As the decision sweeps away the tariff bars between the Philippines and the United States, and leaves the trade tariff-free until Congress ordains otherwise, the most immediate effect of the decision is to throw the Philippine tariff question into Congress. Senator Lodge has introduced a bill into the Senate making legal for the Philippines the tariff schedule set up by the Taft Commission, and putting the Dingley tariff rates in force between the islands and the States; and it is thought that a similar bill will soon be introduced into the House. The Cleveland Plain-Dealer (Ind. Dem.), however, thinks that the plan of having one tariff for one colony and another for another is questionable. It says: "Why should the products of Hawaii and Porto Rico come in free of duty and those of the Philippines be saddled with duties, be they more or less than the Dingley schedule?"

Turning to the "anti-imperialist" comment on the decision, the Baltimore News (Ind. Dem.) says:

"As to the bearing of this attitude [of the Court] upon the broad issues involved in the term 'imperialism,' it can be summed up in the statement that, while it gives no countenance to one kind of imperialism which some people affected to be very much stirred up about, it interposes absolutely no barrier to the other kind—the only kind concerning which there was any justification for active solicitude. From the imperialism of the 'one-man power' there was never any sign that we had much ground to anticipate trouble in any reasonable future; it is the imperialism of national domination, and disregard for the rights of weaker and less advanced peoples, which alone has loomed up as a new element in our development, and one calculated to undermine our old ideals and traditions. If this be a national danger, it is to the national spirit rather than to any action by a judicial tribunal that we should have looked for protection against it; and, at all events, such protection has not been furnished in any measure whatever by the decisions actually rendered by the Supreme Court."

The New York Evening Post (Ind.), another anti-imperialist paper, says:

"The absolute power of Congress, which our highest tribunal has now asserted, may be used in a beneficent way to extricate us from our Philippine plight. The islands are ours, heady expansionists have said, and there is no way of getting rid of them. But the Supreme Court has now held that they are but as other 'property' of the United States, to be alienated if Congress so desires. Our hands are not tied. Congress has full power to heed the prayer of the islanders, at the same time that it consults our own highest interests, by granting Philippine independence at an early day. The President's message reflects the general sobering on this subject. He has got far away from the first glorying of Mr. McKinley in our acquisition of the 'gems and glories of the tropic seas.' To Mr. Roosevelt they are frankly 'a great burden.' There is not a word in his message inconsistent with our ultimate withdrawal—many words, indeed, which hint not obscurely that such may be our final goal. With this falls in the latest Filipino appeal for a promise of 'the ultimate recognition of their rights' as a people. The time is auspicious, therefore, for a fresh consideration of the whole matter, freed from the old rancors and passions; and the hope may reasonably be entertained that the American Congress and people will yet be willing to retrace their steps, and take their position again on our traditional and noble principle that no government shall be imposed upon a people without its consent."

OPENING OF THE CHARLESTON EXPOSITION.

WITH imposing ceremonies, including a parade of federal and state troops and Confederate veterans, a program of exercises graced by Senator Depew and other distinguished speakers, and with words of greeting from the President of the United States, the South Carolina, Interstate and West Indian Exposition was formally opened on December 2. The occasion, declares the Charleston News and Courier, marks "the most momentous day in the newer, and better, and broader life of Charleston, and the State, and the South." It continues:

"There was an almost total suspension of business in the city, and the whole community joined in the most remarkable demonstration in the varied history of this ancient town. More than twenty-two thousand persons passed through the gates of the Exposition grounds. Many of the visitors marveled where they had come from—they were everywhere—and they were all filled with rejoicing. . . . The beauty and grandeur of the scene were heightened only by the delightful temper of the happy thousands, the 'strange tropic warmth and hints of summer seas' which filled the air, and the unrivaled eloquence of the orator of the day. The governor of South Carolina and the mayor of Charleston spake as they were never moved to speak before, and to an audience which was responsive to every sentiment of patriotic aspiration. There was not one untoward incident to mar the harmony of the great occasion, and it was only a forerunner of other memorable days which will mark the splendid progress of the Exposition to its triumphant close."

The Charleston undertaking is, as its directors state, an "exposition with an idea," and its chief object is to promote "more intimate commercial relations with the seventy principal West Indian Islands." "The fertility and the opportunities of the West Indies," remarks the Brooklyn Eagle, "are as yet only faintly beginning to be understood. Anything which directs attention to them or spreads definite knowledge of the chances which they hold out must be of benefit not only to the islands but to this country." The Philadelphia Press says:

"The Charleston Exposition is a proof that the spirit of progress has at last penetrated the most conservative region of the South. The New Orleans, Atlanta, and Nashville Expositions were evidences that the States and regions of which they are the commercial capitals had started on a new career. But Charleston and South Carolina remained at the rear. The breath of the new dispensation had not touched them. But this could not last always. The new era was hurried by the Spanish-American war, which brought the West Indian Islands into more intimate relations with the United States and developed Charleston as one of the natural ports for commerce between the two. The other influence which made the change complete is the great growth of the manufacturing industries of the State, a growth which has placed South Carolina second in the list of States having the largest number of spindles."

The Exposition site occupies about 160 acres of land on the bank of the Ashley River, with a frontage of 2,000 feet on the river. The architecture of the buildings follows closely the styles introduced at the Chicago World's Fair. "There are many picturesque features," declares the Philadelphia Public Ledger, "and the mild and equable climate beckons to the dwellers in the North. The Spanish style of architecture, the red tiles, the skilful use of bright colors, and the sunken gardens with flowers and foliage in bloom, make the 'Ivory City' a pleasing picture, and the Southern people, Southern ways, the horse-races on the grounds, the barbecues, and characteristic features of the Southland Exposition are likely to give it a peculiar charm."

The general features of the Exposition plan are thus sketched in the press despatches:

"There are eleven great departmental buildings: The Cotton and Commerce Palace, the Hall of Agriculture, Minerals, and Forestry Buildings and structures devoted to woman, art, the negro, transportation, and machinery.

"The Administration Building occupies a commanding site. The Cotton Palace covers 50,000 square feet of ground area, the Commerce Palace contains 43,000 square feet of floor space, the Palace of Agriculture the same area, the Administration Building, 16,000 square feet, and the Transportation and Machinery Building each about 20,000 square feet. A commodious auditorium seats about four thousand people.

"The United States Government, in spite of failure of Congress to make an appropriation, has a display here, the Exposition Company having provided the necessary accommodations for the Government exhibit recently seen at Buffalo.

"The Court of Palaces, around which the main Exposition buildings are grouped, is 1,200 feet in length and over 900 feet wide. This court contains 1,650,000 square feet, and one of its unique features is a sunken garden filled with tropical plants grouped around an electric fountain."

THE NEW CANAL TREATY.

THE unanimous vote of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations to report favorably the new Hay-Pauncefote canal treaty is taken to augur a speedy ratification by the Senate, and the early adoption of measures for building the waterway. As the New York Evening Post says: "A canal will surely pierce the isthmus. That must now be regarded as written in the book of fate. Ways and means only remain to be agreed upon." "After fifty years," observes the Philadelphia Press, "thanks to the wisdom, the friendliness, and the candor of the British Government, the two English-speaking nations see eye to eye on this momentous issue. England has the Suez canal. The United States takes the isthmian waterway. These are the two great canals the world over. The English-speaking peoples take both." The country "is in no humor for haggling over technicalities" in the debate on the treaty, declares the New York Journal, and the New York Times says that "nothing but a base and hypocritical hostility to any and all canals can stand in the way of its prompt ratification."

Article I. of the new treaty declares that it "shall supersede" the Clayton-Bulwer Treaty, but it is agreed in the introduction that "the 'general principle' of neutralization established in Article VIII. of that convention" is not to be impaired. Article II. gives to the United States the right to build the canal, and "the exclusive right of providing for the regulation and management of the canal." Article III. contains the rules governing the neutralization of the waterway, "substantially as embodied in the convention of Constantinople" for the Suez canal. It is provided that "the canal shall be free and open to the vessels of commerce and of war of all nations observing these rules, on terms of entire equality." "There shall be no discrimination" in "charges of traffic" or other conditions. "The canal shall never be blockaded, nor shall any right of war be exercised, nor any act of hostility be committed within it. The United States, however, shall be at liberty to maintain such military police along the canal as may be necessary to protect it against lawlessness and disorder." Article IV. provides that "no change of territorial sovereignty or of international relations" of the countries traversed by the canal "shall affect the general principle of neutralization or the obligation of the high contracting parties under the treaty." Article V. provides for the forms of ratification.

It will be seen that the United States is not given the right to forbid the use of the canal to an enemy's war-ships, but several papers remark that no enemy would be likely to try to send his ships through our canal, treaty or no treaty, so that such a clause is unnecessary. The despatches from Washington say that in the meeting of the Committee on Foreign Relations Senator Bacon moved the revival of the amendment to the first Hay-Pauncefote Treaty providing that nothing in the treaty should apply to "measures which the United States might find it necessary to take for securing by its own forces the defense of the United States and the maintenance of public order," but, the despatches add, "the amendment was voted down viva voce."

Of the few papers that object to the treaty the most strenuous is the New York Sun. The Sun quotes the following paragraph as the words of President Roosevelt when the former treaty was up for ratification:

"I most sincerely hope that the pending treaty concerning the isthmian canal will not be ratified unless amended so as to provide that the canal when built shall be wholly under the control of the United States alike in peace and war. This seems to me vital, no less from the standpoint of our sea power than from the standpoint of the Monroe doctrine."

"The simple fact that the President has submitted the new treaty to the Senate" might be taken to show, thinks The Sun, that he believes in "the adequacy of the text of the new convention to define the sort of canal he described less than two years ago; namely, a canal which when built shall be wholly under the control of this nation alike in peace and war." But there are several points that may seem to conflict with this view. In the first place, says The Sun, "the text of the new treaty does not clearly recognize our inherent right to fortify our own canal, if we see fit so to do." Second, if the Suez neutrality rules are to apply to the canal, as the treaty provides, "then it is very clear that the treaty does not provide for such a canal" as the President describes; and third, asks The Sun, does Article IV. mean "that if what is now Nicaragua and what is now Costa Rica should by any chance come, fifty or a hundred years hence, under the sovereignty of the United States, we should be obliged then, and for all future time, to hold open a waterway through our own territory for the battle-ships of any nation at war with us?" And it declares: "The idea is incomprehensible. No nation on the face of the earth would agree to turn its own property and its own territory into means and a channel of vantage for an attacking enemy."

In view of the newspaper talk about the opposition of the railroads to the canal enterprise, an editorial in The Railway World (Philadelphia) makes interesting reading. This journal thinks that the canal "is one of those projects which attract the enthusiasm of the masses and escape the scrutiny of many usually reasonable individuals on account of their spectacular magnitude," and it goes on to view the enterprise as a business proposition. It questions, in the first place, whether it will pay, and intimates that it may cost more than is now calculated. Then, too, "whether it will be kept open after construction is yet another question, and its answer is complicated by Nicaragua earthquakes, Panama pestilences, and American, Mexican, and isthmian railway competition." If it is the success that it is prophesied it will be, "the principal result must be a violent readjustment of domestic industrial conditions," and "nothing less than widespread, altho temporary, depression and disaster of this kind could result should the canal attain anything like the success its advocates prophesy." The claims of the canal advocates, however, are "manifestly extravagant," says this paper, and "the railways may not lose much traffic to an isthmian canal which at the best must involve a circuitous route and a tedious relative delay in transit."

The report of the Isthmian Canal Commission is reviewed as follows by the New York Times:

"The Isthmian Canal Commission appears to have considered with impartial candor the respective advantages of the Panama and Nicaragua routes, and the grounds upon which it recommends the selection of the latter are sufficient and convincing. The Nicaragua Canal will have a length of 183.66 miles, while the Panama route is only 49.09 miles. The Nicaragua canal requires locks, while the other is at sea-level; there are good harbors at both ends of the Panama route, while harbor protection for shipping must be artificially provided upon both coasts of Nicaragua; the time of passage of deep-draft vessels through the Panama canal would be twelve hours, against thirty-three hours through the Nicaragua, and the annual cost of operating the Nicaragua will be $1,350,000 greater than for the Panama canal.

"The advantages of the Nicaragua route, however, are a saving of from one to two days for all Gulf ports and Pacific coast trade, except for that originating on the west coast of South America; sailing-vessels will find more favorable winds in approaching the Nicaragua canal; hygienic conditions are better there than in Colombia, and the Nicaragua canal can be built in six years, while ten would be required for the Panama undertaking. But difference in cost is evidently the determining consideration. The estimate of the commission is that the Nicaragua canal can be built for $189,864,062. The Panama Company offers to sell its rights and property for $109,141,500, and it would cost $144,233,358 to complete the work, making a total cost to the United States of $253,374,858, a difference of $63,510,796 in favor of the Nicaragua route.

"The facts submitted and the recommendations made by the commission will probably be accepted as decisive by Congress. There have been rumors of a 'Panama lobby,' which is said to have sought to obstruct Congressional action favorable to the Nicaraguan route in the interests of the French owners of the Panama Company's uncompleted canal, who have for some time been trying to sell out to the United States. It would seem probable that our Government will now decline to give further consideration to the Panama project."

TOPICS IN BRIEF.

As a boss, Mr. Platt is said to be getting easier and easier.—The Washington Star.

CURIOUS that the isthmian revolution should come to a full stop at Colon.—The New York World.

THE isthmus of Panama seems to be the vermiform appendix of the hemisphere.—The Chicago News.

NEXT year Buffalo will be quite content to worry along with her little Erie County fair.—The Washington Post.

AN isthmus these days is a small strip of fight connecting two larger bodies of trouble.—The Baltimore American.

ALL that remains is to set the Colombian revolution to music and produce it as a comic opera.—The Baltimore American.

IT'S quite another thing when China respectfully petitions for an open door to the United States.—The Philadelphia Ledger.

MANUFACTURERS are overwhelmed with orders for automobiles. The horseless carriage has come to go.—The Chicago Tribune.

WE don't know what is the underlying principle of Christian Science, unless it be that microbes are liable to get religion.—Puck.

AMERICAN business men appear to be conquering South Africa rather more rapidly than Kitchener is.—The Philadelphia Ledger.

POSSIBLY, the best way to suppress Bullerism in England would be to send Sir Redvers back to the front.—The Philadelphia Ledger.

CAPTAIN MAHAN finds that the British have gained prestige by the Boer war. Just see what a great strategist can ascertain.—The Washington Post.

IF Secretary Gage is wise he will not take any Congressmen by the hands and lead them over to the treasury to see the surplus.—The Chicago News.

A New York negro is turning white. Evidently he is trying to meet the qualifications for voting in Alabama and Mississippi.—The Detroit Free Press.

MAKING GAME OF DEVERY.—The selection of Partridge for New York's police commissioner is likely to make Devery quail.—The Boston Transcript.

QUEEN WILHELMINA's consort and Abdul Hamid should form some kind of a syndicate and take the benefit of the bankruptcy law.—The St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

RICHARD CROKER's bulldog has taken a prize in Philadelphia. This delicate mark of sympathy comes in time to adorn a brief but pointed tale of the two cities.—The Baltimore American.

FRANK, ANYWAY.—Have you been shorn good and plenty in that fool's paradise, Wall Street? Yes? Then why not give horse-racing a chance?—From a racing tipster's advertisement in The New York Sun.

A CHICAGO COMMENT.—Before entering upon the construction of the Nicaragua canal the Government should find out whether St. Louis will or will not waive all possible damages to its water supply.—The Chicago Inter-Ocean.

THE New York World declares that the demand for tariff revision comes from the Republican farmer. But the World neglects to publish the farmer's name, possibly out of regard for the feelings of his family.—The Kansas City Journal.

AN American syndicate is reported to have bought the English "Shell" line of steamers. If this game continues much longer John Bull should be able to put his finger right on the place where the little ball is hidden.—The Chicago Evening Post.

ATTENTION is called to the fact that the conscience fund is being swelled this year as never before. The explanation undoubtedly is that when times are good the awakened conscience doesn't miss the cash so much.—The Cleveland Plain-Dealer.

AN exchange laments that Niagara, one of nature's great spectacles, a wonder of the ages, has become the propeller of base machinery and the exploiter of sensation seekers. It has been noticed for some time that Niagara was going down hill.—The Kansas City Journal.

A CORRESPONDENT wants to know why the American Declaration of Independence and the Constitution are not read in the schools of Manila. As a matter of fact we do not know whether these very sound political documents are read or not read in the schools; but we can imagine that there might be times when it would be mighty awkward for a teacher to read the Declaration before a class of thoughtful and logically minded boys and girls.—The Manila American.

THE AWAKENING OF RIP VAN BULL.

"Oh! Oh! Mine back, vat is the matter mit me? Hello, vat country is dat?"
—The Indianapolis Journal.

THE NEW SUBMARINE BOAT "FULTON" HAS BEEN ORDERED TO WASHINGTON.

Is it possible that Present Roosevelt expects to escape the office-seekers?
—The Chicago Record-Herald.

AMERICAN IDEAS IN CARTOON.

LETTERS AND ART.

DO WOMEN WRITE THE BEST NOVELS?

A RECENT writer, Mr. Frank Norris, looking over the rank and file of achievements in recorded history, observes that of all the occupations at first exclusively followed by men, that of writing has been one of the very first to be invaded successfully by women. If it is the first, Mr. Norris thinks, that must be because it is the easiest. At any rate, he says, in our present day and time it should be easier for women to write well than for men; and since writing to-day means the writing of fiction, women should be able to write better novels than men. He gives the reasons for his conclusion (Boston Transcript, November 13) in this way:

"The average man, who must work for a living, has no time to write novels, much less to get into that frame of mind or to assume that mental attitude by means of which he is able to see possibilities for fictitious narrative in the life around him. But as yet few women (compared with the armies of male workers) have to work for a living and it is an unusual state of affairs in which the average woman of moderate circumstances could not, if she would, take from three to four hours a day from her household duties to devote to any occupation she deemed desirable.

"Another reason is found, one believes, in the nature of women's education. From almost the very first the young man studies with an eye to business, or to a profession. In many state colleges nowadays all literary courses, except the most elementary—which indeed have no place in collegiate curriculums—are optional. But what girls' seminary does not prescribe the study of literature through all its three or four years, making of this study a matter of all importance? and while the courses of literature do not, by any manner of means, make a novelist, they familiarize the student with style and the means by which words are put together. The more one reads, the easier one writes.

"Then, too (tho this reason lies not so much in modern conditions as in basic principles), there is the matter of temperament. The average man is a rectangular, square-cut, matter-of-fact, sober-minded animal who does not receive impressions easily, who is not troubled with emotions and has no overmastering desire to communicate his sensations to anybody. But the average woman is just the reverse of all these. She is impressionable, emotional, and communicative. And impressionableness, emotionality, and communicativeness are three very important qualities of mind that make for novel-writing."

The deduction which might reasonably follow is by no means a true one, says Mr. Norris. He asserts with positiveness that the modern woman, who, in a greater degree than her contemporaneous male, has the leisure, the education, and the temperament for novel-writing and should be able therefore to write better novels, as a matter of fact, does not do so:

"It is, of course, a conceded fact that there have been more great men novelists than women novelists, and that to-day the producers of the best fiction are men and not women. There are probably more women trying to write novels than there are men; but for all this it must be admitted that the ranks of the 'arrived' are recruited from the razor-using contingent."

Why should this be so? asks the writer, and he replies as follows:

"Women who have all the other qualifications of good novelists are, because of the nature and character that invariably goes with these qualifications, shut away from the study of, and the association with, the most important thing of all for them—real life. Even making allowances for the emancipation of the new woman, the majority of women still lead, in comparison with men, secluded lives. The woman who is impressionable is by reason of this very thing sensitive (indeed, sensitiveness and impressionableness mean almost the same thing), and it is inconceivably hard for the sensitive woman to force herself into the midst of that great, grim complication of men's doings that we call life. And even admitting that she finds in herself the courage to do this, she lacks the knowledge to use knowledge thus gained. The faculty of selection comes even to men only after many years of experience.

"So much for causes exterior to herself, and it is well to admit at once that the exterior causes are by far the most potent and the most important; but there are perhaps causes to be found in the make-up of the woman herself which keep her from success in fiction. Is it not a fact that protracted labor of the mind tells upon a woman quicker than upon a man? Be it understood that no disparagement, no invidious comparison is intended. Indeed it is quite possible that her speedier mental fatigue is due to the fact that the woman possesses the more highly specialized organ.

"A man may grind on steadily for an almost indefinite period, when a woman at the same task would begin, after a certain point, to 'feel her nerves,' to chafe, to fret, to try to do too much, to polish too highly, to develop more perfectly. Then come fatigue, harassing doubts, more nerves, a touch of hysteria occasionally, exhaustion, and in the end complete discouragement and a final abandonment of the enterprise; and who shall say how many good, even great, novels have remained half-written, to be burned in the end, because their women authors mistook lack of physical strength for lack of genuine ability?"

AMERICAN "ART FAKIRS" IN PARIS.

JULIAN RALPH, the well-known European correspondent of American journals, says that it is high time some one ordered a halt in the fashion of filling Paris with American art students who are hopelessly wanting in talent. He speaks bluntly of such as "art fakirs," in Collier's Weekly (November 16), and sets forth there "frank truths concerning a flourishing evil." He notices some changed conditions:

"Time was, and it was not more than forty years ago, when there was not an American art student in the Quartier Latin. Afterward, from twenty-five to thirty years ago, a few gifted, earnest young Americans went to Paris to obtain the magic of the few masters whose ateliers were open to learners. These Americans were all men of the type of Charles Reinhardt, Cox, Weldon, Metcalfe, Mowbray, Sargeant, Du Maurier of England, George Boughton—with widely differing degrees of talent possessing them, yet all enthusiastic, earnest, full of art, promising brilliant futures. These men were of such kinship in every important impulse, so earnest, so able, and so high-minded that they all came together in intimate companionship. There were no drones among them, no block-heads, no mere faddists, no frauds, and no hopeless failures in the coterie.

"Now go to Paris as I have been obliged to do every few weeks, and look calmly and soberly at the results of the revolution by which every town of the size of Kankakee and every so-called art school or 'league' in places like Madison, Wis., is sending its annual quota of foredoomed failures to study art in that capital. The result is sad, almost and often quite tragical, sickening, shameful."

Mr. Ralph's description of the process by which he says most American art students are "sorted out for sacrifice upon this altar of folly" is amusing:

"Melonville, Ind., has a population of fifteen thousand souls.

JULIAN RALPH.

It has two daily newspapers, a library composed of 'boomed' novels, a set calling itself 'the best society' which hold five-o'clock teas, dresses and poses its members à la Dana Gibson's pictures, and takes up palm-reading, theosophy, bowling, bridge whist, and so on, following each craze until the next one knocks it out. Of course, Melonville, after years of contemplation of a lithograph of Millet's 'Angelus,' a chromo of a platitude by Millais, and a 'sweet' reprint of Rembrandt by himself, to say nothing of the plaster cast of the Venus of Milo in the library, which tore the Baptist Church into two parties and led to the building of the Second Baptist Church—after all this, it must have an art school. It has one, and Mr. Da Vinci Butt, of Terre Haute, who must be an artist because he attended the Art Students' League in New York a whole winter, is salaried to preside over the new fountain of progress and polish. In order to justify his existence, Da Vinci Butt has to declare the presence of geniuses in his school, and finds this once rare gift so plentiful that he advises four of his young lady pupils and one of the masculine students to go to Paris in order to return and astonish America. Not one of the five boasts an ancestor who could do one greater stroke of art than to handle a scythe or drive a mower and reaper. Not one of the five can draw a soap-box and make it appear to stand solidly on the floor. Not one among them all has 'the color sense,' a correct eye, a trace of artistic instinct. Not one possesses the originality by which Gustave Doré made the most forceful pictures without being able to draw, or the earnestness and patience by which Burne-Jones, artistic but a weak draughtsman, forced his hand to work the will of his genius."

The life in Paris of these "misguided people" is not an alluring picture as this writer paints it. He says: "They will get living down to an egg and a glass of milk each morning, a one-franc dinner of horse-meat, or tripe and park sparrows at night, and a gluttonous three-franc feast once a month when the remittance comes from home." They work hard at their futile tasks in "art factories" where no standard of merit is set, and where "whoever pays the price is encouraged—to keep on paying it." Moreover, Paris, for the inapt, self-deceived art student, is a dangerous place:

"Paris, to an artist, to an enthusiast, to a sincere worker, is a synonym for Paradise. Its vices do not harm such zealots, its wickedness takes no hold upon those whose minds are filled with their efforts to succeed. But Paris to the fakir, the faddist, and the fictitious artist is an evil, demoralizing, cancerous corner of Hades. Our American girls who go there seldom go wrong; indeed, I know of no instance where they have done so. But they grow accustomed to that which is impure, wise in what it can not do them—or any one—any good to know. They are far from being bettered in any way by the time they fool away in deceiving themselves and disappointing their people at home. It is time that some one told the plain truth, bluntly, that America stands alone in sending an annual regiment, or two regiments, of hopeless incompetents to study art in Paris."

A different impression of the conditions which surround American art students in Paris and, in some measure, of the personnel of the student body is gained by reading what Mr. John W. Alexander, the artist, has recently said on these subjects. The New York Commercial Advertiser (November 14) reports a speech of his before the National Arts Club in which the yearly expatriation of American art students who make Paris their goal is thus explained:

"I have lived in Germany, Italy, and England, but there is a charm about Paris which surpasses that of the famed Italian skies, of the Devonshire fields, or of the Rhenish country. It is an atmosphere especially adapted to the artistic temperament, a place where to be an artist means something, where a palette and brush command the respect which titles only enjoy here. No matter how far up the ladder you are, no matter whether you have reached the top or whether you are merely groping your way to the first round, there the fact that you are striving after something for art's sake will win you the sympathy and encouragement of your colleagues and the respect of the general public. . . .

"The American art student who goes to Paris goes there also because he has learned that the magic word 'Paris' painted above his signature will increase the selling-price of his painting 25 per cent. at least. He knows that the tag of the Salon stuck on his canvas will increase its value 33¼ per cent., and, therefore, he works tooth and nail to get into that Salon. Then, again, the art schools of Paris are unsurpassed. We have good schools in this country also, but the atmosphere is lacking."

POETS OF THE YOUNGER GENERATION.

MR. EDGAR FAWCETT says that it is now many years since England has welcomed a new poet with ardor, and he finds that the reason is that there is a pretty general belief that there have been no new English poets of late worth welcoming. As to the unpopularity of new verse, he says in The Era (November): "Poetry is to-day the literal bugbear of English publishers. If you meet a new book of poems in London, the chances are one out of five hundred that its expenses of issue have been wholly paid by the author. If its sale reaches two hundred copies, this author is in rare luck. Forty copies are by no means an unusual taking, nor are twenty, nor even ten." He is told that five dollars is the price usually paid by British weekly journals of the highest rank for a sonnet, or a lyric of, say, seven stanzas. Very frequently these same sheets take it for granted that their poet is humble-minded enough to expect no payment whatever.

To this rule of unpopularity, Mr. Fawcett finds a few exceptions. "'Herod,' Stephen Phillips's metrical play, both acted as a drama and circulated as a book, must have netted the author, by now, many hundreds of pounds. His earlier volume, called simply 'Poems,' and his second one, 'Paolo and Francesca,' have been in great demand."

Mr. Fawcett thinks; however, that both Mr. William Watson and Mr. F. B. Money-Coutts surpass Mr. Phillips in poetic gift. "Mr. Money-Coutts has written one poem, entitled 'An Essay in a Brief Model,' which for diction and thought stands almost unmatched." Another "truest of true poets" in England to-day is A. E. Housman, author of "A Shropshire Lad," "brimful of melancholy," but "brimful of genius besides."

Mr. William Archer, the distinguished English critic, has written recently a book in which are collected specimens of the verse of thirty-three living English and American poets born since 1850. London Literature (October 19) in a review of this book says:

"A little while ago Mr. Stopford Brooke complained—we forget his exact words—that he was tired of hearing the latest new versifier acclaimed as a new Shakespeare or Milton. It is, we know, a common belief that this kind of exaggeration is usual among critics; but in the case of poets, at any rate, Mr. Stopford Brooke's complaint seemed to be founded on the common belief only, and not on a real experience. As far as our observation has gone, certainly, we have not found the younger poets overwhelmed with this excessive praise; we have only found them ignored. And yet there is undoubtedly at the present moment a large output of verse which is sincere, careful, varied, in the main thoroughly wholesome, and which, if a judicious selection be made from it, attains a really high standard of quality. This augurs well both for the culture of the nation and for the future of English poetry, and it is good that attention should be focussed to this feature of our literary life."

The select few whom, as Literature puts it, "Mr. Archer's searchlight discovers wandering on the slopes of Parnassus" are: H. C. Beeching, A. C. Benson, Laurence Binyon, Alice Brown, Bliss Carman, Madison Cawein, A. T. Quiller-Couch, F. B. Money-Coutts, John Davidson, Mrs. Hinkson, Nora Hopper (Mrs. Chesson), A. E. Housman, Laurence Housman, Richard Hovey, Rudyard Kipling, Richard Le Gallienne, Mrs. Meynell, E. Nesbit (Mrs. Bland), Henry Newbolt, Stephen Phillips, Mrs. Radford, C. G. D. Roberts, G. Santayana, Duncan Campbell Scott, Dora Sigerson (Mrs. Shorter), Arthur Symonds, J. B. Tabb, Francis Thompson, F. H. Trench, Mrs. Marriott Watson, William Watson, Mrs. Woods, W. B. Yeats.

How many of these thirty-three names, Literature wonders, are familiar to the "average reader," even to the average reader who is "fond of poetry"? "And yet Mr. Archer in the extracts which he has selected, with great judgment, from their writings is able to show that every one of them possesses real poetical merit, and deserves a hearing."

MR. HENLEY'S ESTIMATE OF "R. L. S."

THE recently published "Life of Robert Louis Stevenson," written by his cousin Mr. Graham Balfour, has been received with a chorus of appreciative comment for author and biographer alike. A single note of dissonance, however, struck by Stevenson's life-time friend, Mr. W. E. Henley, the English poet and man of letters, has served to stir up discord which is largely in evidence in current editorial utterance. Mr. Henley's pronouncement appears in The Pall Mall Magazine (December), and we quote from it as follows:

"I can only take Mr. Balfour's book as a solemn and serious essay in that kind of make-believe in which the biographees (if one may use so flippant a neologism in so august a connection) did all his life rejoice and was exceeding glad. I read; and as I read I am oppressed by the thought that here is Lewis Stevenson very much as he may well have wanted to be, but that here is not Lewis Stevenson at all. At any rate, here is not the Lewis Stevenson I knew. . . .

"For me there were two Stevensons; the Stevenson who went to America in '87; and the Stevenson who never came back. The first I knew, and loved; the other I lost touch with, and, tho I admired him, did not greatly esteem. My relation to him was that of a man with a grievance; and for that reason, perhaps—that reason and others—I am by no means disposed to take all Mr. Balfour says for gospel, nor willing to forget, on the showing of what is after all an official statement, the knowledge gained in an absolute intimacy of give-and-take which lasted for thirteen years, and includes so many of the circumstances of those thirteen years that, as I believe, none living now can pretend to speak of them with any such authority as mine."

Of Mr. Balfour's estimate of Stevenson the writer says: "'Tis as that of an angel clean from heaven, and I, for my part, flatly refuse to recognize it." He goes on to give his own estimate in this way:

"Mr. Balfour does me the honor of quoting the sonnet into which I crammed my impressions of my companion and friend; and, since he has done so, I may as well own that 'the Shorter Catechist' of the last verse was an afterthought. In those days he was in abeyance, to say the least; and if, even then, il allait poindre à l'horizon (as the composition, in secret and as if ashamed, of Lay Morals persuades me to believe he did), I, at any rate, was too short-sighted to suspect his whereabouts. When I realized it, I completed my sonnet; but this was not till years had come and gone, and the Shorter Catechist, already detested by more than one, was fully revealed to me.

"I will say at once that I do not love the Shorter Catechist, in anybody, and that I loved him less in Stevenson than anywhere that I have ever found him. He is too unselfish and too self-righteous a beast for me. He makes ideals for himself with a resolute regard for his own salvation; but he is all too apt to damn the rest of the world for declining to live up to them, and he is all too ready to make a lapse of his own the occasion for a rule of conduct for himself and the lasting pretext for a highly moral deliverance to such backsliding Erastians as, having memories and a certain concern for facts, would like him to wear his rue with a difference. At bottom Stevenson was an excellent fellow. But he was of his essence what the French call personnel. He was, that is, incessantly and passionately interested in Stevenson. He could not be in the same room with a mirror but he must invite its confidences every time he passed it; to him there was nothing obvious in time and eternity, and the smallest of his discoveries, his most trivial apprehensions, were all by way of being revelations, and as revelations must be thrust upon the world; he was never so much in earnest, never so well pleased (this were he happy or wretched), never so irresistible, as when he wrote about himself. Withal, if he wanted a thing, he went after it with an entire contempt for consequences. For these, indeed, the Shorter Catechist was ever prepared to answer; so that whether he did well or ill, he was safe to come out unabashed and cheerful."

Mr. Henley half promises that in days to come he will write "as much as can be told" of Stevenson, the man. Till then he will make his present protest suffice; and he says of it:

"If it convey the impression that I take a view of Stevenson which is my own, and which declines to be concerned with this Seraph in Chocolate, this barley-sugar effigy of a real man; that the best and the most interesting part of Stevenson's life will never get written—even by me; and that the Shorter Catechist of Vailima, however brilliant and distinguished as a writer of stories, however authorized and acceptable as an artist in morals, is not my old, riotous, intrepid, scornful Stevenson at all—suffice it will."

Leaving at this point his discussion of Stevenson's personality, the critic proceeds to deal with his one-time literary associate in language which betrays that he considers the debt of "R. L. S." to himself by no means slight in respect of play-writing and dramatic criticism, of the appreciation and understanding of music, and of the art of letters. Of the last named he says, however:

"To tell the truth, his books are none of mine; I mean, that if I want reading, I do not go for it to the Edinburgh Edition. I am not interested in remarks about morals; in and out of letters I have lived a full and varied life, and my opinions are my own. So, if I crave the enchantment of romance, I ask it of bigger men than he, and of bigger books than his: of 'Esmond' (say) and 'Great Expectations,' of 'Redgauntlet' and 'Old Mortality,' of 'La Reine Margot' and 'Bragelonne,' of 'David Copperfield' and 'A Tale of Two Cities,' while, if good writing and some other things be in my appetite, are there not always Hazlitt and Lamb—to say nothing of that 'globe of miraculous continents' which is known to us as Shakespeare? There is his style, you will say; and it is a fact that it is rare, and in the last times better, because much simpler, than in the first. But, after all, his style is so perfectly achieved that the achievement gets obvious; and when achievement gets obvious, is it not by way of becoming uninteresting? And is there not something to be said for the person who wrote that Stevenson always reminded him of a young man dressed the best he ever saw for the Burlington Arcade? Stevenson's work in letters does not now take me much, and I decline to enter on the question of its immortality; since that, despite what any can say, will get itself settled, soon or late, for all time. No; when I care to think of Stevenson it is not of 'R. L. S.'; R. L. S. 'the renowned, the accomplished, executing his difficult solo': but of the 'Lewis' that I knew, and and wrought for, and worked with for so long."

Mr. Henley's last word is to the effect that he can not subscribe to the sentiment so freely expressed that Stevenson "must be praised now and always, because, being a stricken man, he would loved, work out his life":

"Do we not all do that [he asks]? And why, because he wrote better than any one, should he have praise and fame for doing that which many a poor, consumptive sempstress does: cheerfully, faithfully, with no eloquent appeals to God, nor so much as a paragraph in the evening papers? That a man writes well at death's door is surely no reason for making him a hero; for, after all, there is as much virtue in making a shirt, or finishing a gross of match-boxes, in the very act of mortality, as there is in polishing a verse, or completing a chapter in a novel. . . . There is no wonder that Stevenson wrote his best in the shadow of the Shade; for writing his best was very life to him. Why, then, all this crawling astonishment—this voluble admiration? If it meant anything, it would mean that we have forgotten how to live, and that none of us is prepared to die; and that were an outrage on the innumerable unstoried martyrdoms of humanity."

Let this be said of him, once for all: 'He was a good man, good at many things, and now this also he has attained to, to be at rest.' That covers Sophocles and Shakespeare, Marlborough and Bonaparte. Let it serve for Stevenson; and, for ourselves, let us live and die uninsulted, as we lived and died before his books began to sell and his personality was a marketable thing."

Several English periodicals have been quick to resent the attitude which Mr. Henley has taken. Others have published communications from friends of Mr. Henley who have rallied to his defense. However, not one view entirely coincident with his own is to be found in any of them, altho their editorial utterance upon the matter is more temperate than that of the American journals. A writer in the London Academy (November 23) fairly represents the prevailing spirit shown in England. He says:

"Mr. Henley has done his worst for Stevenson. What is the result? What do we learn from him? That 'Stevenson was incessantly and passionately interested in Stevenson'; that 'no better histrion ever lived'; that in the years that Mr. Henley knew him Stevenson did not always practise what he preached; that he did not originate all the youthful pranks that his biographers have fathered upon him; that Mr. Henley spent himself more in the service of 'the Lewis that I knew and loved' than the world wots of, and that a candid friend, with a grievance against the biographee, does not make a convincing biographer."

"If Mr. Henley's article is a specimen of the 'new biography' from the pen of the friend who knows, then give us the official 'Life.' We have already said what we thought of Mr. Balfour's colorless but conscientious 'Life'; but that, in conjunction with the 'Letters' and Mr. Colvin's biographical chapters, gives, we believe, the true picture of the man. Mr. Henley's pages, with their trivial accusations of frailty, add nothing, prove nothing."

"Stevenson is beyond the reach of praise or blame. He was neither whole saint nor whole sinner, but, like most of us, something of both. He was a man of infinite variety. In early life his many-sided nature, his lively fancy, his eagerness for experience ran him hither and thither; later it settled into a broad, deep stream. He could always be kind, and just, and sympathetic in his estimate of others. That, his paper on 'Burns' shows. He knew how little we understand one another, how 'greatly dark' a man we have known even for thirteen years may be. Hear him:

"Alas! I fear every man and woman of us is 'greatly dark' to all their neighbors, from the day of birth until death removes them, in their greatest virtues as well as in their saddest thoughts; and we, who have been trying to read the character of Burns, may take home the lesson and be gentle in our thoughts."

The New York Tribune's London correspondent writes:

"The literary controversy excited over Mr. Henley's article on Stevenson is increasing in bitterness. Mr. Henley's numerous enemies are attacking him furiously as a treacherous, disloyal friend and jealous and malignant slanderer. Mr. Henley's friends are rallying to his defense and protesting against the indiscriminating glorification of Mr. Stevenson in progress for a long time. These passages at arms between blind enthusiasts and over-candid friends can not be described as among the amenities of literature, especially as there is an unpleasant speculation over a missing epithet of three letters applied to Mr. Stevenson by those who knew him well. Mr. Henley is primarily responsible for the noxious controversy over the Samoan grave, and some of his warmest admirers condemn the article."

In its editorial reference to the matter, the New York Times (November 25) calls the "attack" by Mr. Henley upon Stevenson "perhaps the most contemptible episode in the history of modern literature." The comment of the Detroit Journal (November 25) is:

"Of course, Mr. Henley can contend that he is doing good service to his friend's memory by painting him as Cromwell wished to be painted, 'warts and all,' but the world will jump to the conclusion that he is jealous of a dead man. Robert Louis Stevenson, his art, his culture, his ravishing style, died in the South Sea island. Writer after writer of the new school comes forward and confesses his debt to Stevenson, the man who first taught him to put his house in order. Everybody now confesses to his exquisite use of words, his picturesqueness, his insight into human nature, particularly into the finer shades of emotion, his sensitiveness to external impressions, and the beautiful precision of his language in describing them. No man ever touched the English language to finer issues. . . . The Stevenson cult is growing."

"This must all be very sour grapes for Mr. Henley, who in manner and diction apes his dead friend. Like Stevenson, he is a précieux; like Stevenson, he revels in fine shades and delicate nuances; like Stevenson, he is a poet. He is cast in almost the same mold so far as esthetic taste goes; but, as a man, he has not the same heart, the same universal human sympathy. Mr. Henley in all the graces of style and thought and language is fit to be a classic, but he has missed being great because he is too finical to be entirely human. This is the apple of discord from which Mr. Henley suffers. He envies Stevenson the laurels of posterity. He can not get them. He puts himself on a level with our dear, vain, goo-goo-eyed little friend, Hall Caine, who said of Stevenson: 'He has contributed more to the form than to the thought of literature.' Such a thing from the mouth of a man who writes with his feet and thinks with the back of his neck is not surprising. But from an exquisite like Mr. Henley it is execrable."

THE BOOK BAROMETER.

CHANGES in the demands upon booksellers and libraries for current fiction were fewer in the month ending November 1 than in the preceding month (see THE LITERARY DIGEST, November 16). The World's Work (December) prints the appended lists, from which it appears that save for Kipling's "Kim," Weir Mitchell's "Circumstance," and Mrs. Catherwood's "Lazarre," there are no newcomers among the first ten of the dealers' list. That furnished by the librarians contains no new books in the first ten, altho the relative positions of these ten novels have changed somewhat since the last report:

BOOK-DEALERS' REPORTS.

- | | |
|--|---|
| 1. The Right of Way—Parker. | 17. The Puppet Crown—McGrath. |
| 2. D'ri and I—Bacheller. | 18. The Tory Lover—Jewett. |
| 3. The Eternal City—Caine. | 19. The Ruling Passion—Van Dyke. |
| 4. The Crisis—Churchill. | 20. Warwick of the Knobs—Lloyd. |
| 5. Kim—Kipling. | 21. Tarry Thou Till I Come—Croly. |
| 6. Blennerhasset—Pidgin. | 22. The Helmet of Navarre—Runkle. |
| 7. Cardigan—Chambers. | 23. Life Everlasting—Fiske. |
| 8. Circumstance—Mitchell. | 24. The Secret Orchard—Castle. |
| 9. Lazarre—Catherwood. | 25. Föma Gordyeeff—Görki. |
| 10. Graustark—McCutcheon. | 26. The History of Sir Richard Calmady—Malet. |
| 11. Tristram of Blent—Hope. | 27. A Friend with the Countersign—Benson. |
| 12. The Cavalier—Cable. | 28. Raffles—Hornung. |
| 13. Captain Ravenshaw—Stephens. | 29. In Search of Mademoiselle—Gibbs. |
| 14. New Canterbury Tales—Hewlett. | 30. The Octopus—Norris. |
| 15. The Making of a Marchioness—Burnett. | |
| 16. The Red Chancellor—Magnay. | |

LIBRARIANS' REPORTS.

- | | |
|---|--|
| 1. The Crisis—Churchill. | 17. The Visits of Elizabeth—Glyn. |
| 2. D'ri and I—Bacheller. | 18. The Gentleman from Indiana—Tarkington. |
| 3. The Eternal City—Caine. | 19. When Knighthood Was in Flower—Major. |
| 4. The Right of Way—Parker. | 20. Kim—Kipling. |
| 5. Truth Dexter—McCall. | 21. The Cavalier—Cable. |
| 6. The Puppet Crown—McGrath. | 22. China and the Allies—Londor. |
| 7. The Helmet of Navarre—Runkle. | 23. Eben Holden—Bacheller. |
| 8. A Sailor's Log—Evans. | 24. The Individual—Shaler. |
| 9. The Tribulations of a Princess—Anon. | 25. Penelope's Irish Experiences—Wiggin. |
| 10. Blennerhasset—Pidgin. | 26. Föma Gordyeeff—Görky. |
| 11. The Life of Phillips Brooks—Allen. | 27. Eleanor—Ward. |
| 12. Tarry Thou Till I Come—Croly. | 28. Like Another Helen—Horton. |
| 13. Graustark—McCutcheon. | 29. The Octopus—Norris. |
| 14. Up from Slavery—Washington. | 30. The Riddle of the Universe—Haeckel. |
| 15. Alice of Old Vincennes—Thompson. | |
| 16. Cardigan—Chambers. | |

The order of demand for the six best-selling novels between October 1 and November 1, according to The Bookman (December), is as follows:

- | | |
|--------------------------|-----------------------|
| The Right of Way—Parker. | D'ri and I—Bacheller. |
| The Crisis—Churchill. | Kim—Kipling. |
| The Eternal City—Caine. | Lazarre—Catherwood. |

SCIENCE AND INVENTION.

THE SUN'S HEAT; WHENCE AND HOW GREAT?

HOW much heat does the earth receive from the sun? How large a fraction is this of the total amount given off? What is the sun's temperature? How does it keep up its heat-supply? These are questions that have occupied students of physical astronomy for many years, and it can not be said that they are yet answered to the satisfaction of everybody. The latest state of scientific belief on the subject is set forth by Dr. Albert Battandier in Cosmos (Paris, November 16). Says Dr. Battandier:

"One day, George Stephenson, seeing a train drawn by one of his locomotives, asked of a friend: 'What makes that train go?' 'The engine,' was the reply. 'But what moves the engine?' 'The steam.' 'And what makes the steam?' 'The coal.' 'But what has produced the coal?' His friend remained silent for a moment after this unforeseen question, and Stephenson replied to it in a word—The sun."

"And, in fact, the whole earth is the gift of the sun. . . . Now we can ask regarding the sun a fourfold question. What is the quantity of heat that it sends to the earth; what is the quantity that it sends out into space; what is its temperature, that enables it to produce such enormous effects; and, finally, how is its heat kept up and preserved?

"It is not difficult to measure the quantity of heat that the sun pours on the earth. Herschel found, at the Cape of Good Hope, that in one minute a vertical sun could melt a layer of ice 0.1915 millimeter [about $\frac{1}{16}$ inch] thick. Pouillet, trying the same experiment at Paris, obtained the figures 0.1786. There is a difference between the two, but it is easy to explain it by the difference of permeability of the atmosphere and by local conditions. If we take the average, or 0.1850, we reach the result that in one hour the sun's heat is capable of melting a layer of ice 1.11 centimeters [about $\frac{1}{2}$ inch] thick.

"But this value is much below the truth. We measure thus only the effect produced by the sun's heat on the surface of the ground; now to reach us the rays must traverse the atmosphere, which abstracts a great part of the heat. This is shown by experiments made at various heights. . . . If, then, we could do away with the atmosphere, the earth would receive on its surface almost twice as much heat as it does now. If we could distribute this uniformly, the amount received in one year would be sufficient to liquefy a shell of ice 30 meters [nearly 100 feet] thick around the entire globe."

But the earth is not alone in space, and it receives but a very tiny part of the heat given out by the sun—about $\frac{1}{5,135,000,000}$. To have, therefore, the total heat dispensed by the sun, we should multiply the amount already obtained by the denominator of this fraction. This heat would be equal in one second to that produced by the combustion of 11,600,000 billions of tons of coal, and would be sufficient to raise in one hour from the temperature of melting ice to the boiling-point eight times the volume of water contained in all the seas of the globe. To quote again:

"When we have shown the almost immeasurable effects of the sun's heat-radiation, it would seem that to argue from effect to source would be only child's play, and yet this is the point where differences of opinion begin. What is the sun's temperature? This simple and precise question throws the scientists into the greatest embarrassment, and they give the most diverse answers to it. Witness the following examples, where the numbers are arranged in increasing order:

Vicaire	1,396°	Zolner	102,000°
Violle	1,500°	Newton	1,669,300°
Pouillet	1,461° to 1,771°	Ericsson	2,726,700°
Fozeau	7,500°	Secchi	2,000,000° to 6,000,000°
Ste-Claire Deville	2,500° to 2,800°	Soret	5,801,546°
Rosetti	20,000°	Waterston	9,000,000° to 10,000,000°
Spover	27,000°

"We see that the disagreement could scarcely be more complete, and we may well ask how scientific methods can possibly lead to such different results. The excellent review of Mgr. Pietro Maffi, in Rivista di Fisica, presents a study of the most recent investigations along this line. If you take an actinometer, it says, and expose it to the sun, its temperature will gradually rise until it becomes stationary. Then the bulb of the thermometer will be losing by radiation just what it is gaining by direct irradiation from the sun. It is from this fact as a starting-point that different investigators have sought to evaluate the sun's temperature. They have made use of the law discovered by Newton that loss of heat by radiation is proportional to the difference of temperature. . . . Now Newton's law is exact for temperatures from 0° to 100° but not above. Dulong and Petit, having taken up the investigation, made calculations for temperatures up to 300°, and the results, confirmed by experiment, gave for the temperature of 240° a value double that found by Newton. Given this double basis it is clear that the conclusions will be different as the authors take the law of Newton or the experiments of Dulong and Petit."

Dr. Battandier concludes that the figures of Rosetti, 20,000°, are the most reasonable. The lower ones are inadmissible because the spectroscope shows us that the sun contains the vapors of substances that vaporize only at higher temperatures than these. The higher ones—those that run up into the millions—seem unnecessarily large, as it is certain that all the phenomena that we have seen in the sun may take place at a few thousands of degrees.

This is a fearful heat; how does the sun, which is cooling off all the time, keep it up? Combustion is out of the question, for, as we have seen, that would sustain it only for a very brief time.

The fall of meteors into the sun could, and probably does, help to maintain it. But the author accepts Helmholtz's view that the slow condensation of the sun is sufficient to keep up its temperature. Of course this must one day come to an end and the sun will ultimately cool off; but the time that must elapse before this passes human imagination. Ere it takes place, the sun may collide with some other great celestial body, and it and its planets, instead of perishing with cold, may "melt with fervent heat" as the Scriptures tell us they will do.—Translation made for THE LITERARY DIGEST.

PRACTISE IN AN AIR-SHIP.

OF the two types of air-ship, the dirigible balloon and the aeroplane, the latter has been the favorite of scientific men, but purely from theoretical considerations. The success of such inventors as Santos-Dumont has given the dirigible balloon a boom, as showing what can actually be accomplished with it. Santos-Dumont has "flown" around the Eiffel Tower, whereas no aeroplane with a man on board has ever flown a foot. In the Revue Scientifique, M. Messier points out that this must necessarily be the case as long as systematic trials of progressive degrees of difficulty are not made of these machines. He says:

"The complete failure of the attempts of Lilienthal, Maxim, Roze, and all others who have attempted to solve the problem of aerial navigation with devices heavier than the air, shows how rash it is to seek the solution of such a difficult question. Is it not evident that even when an eminent inventor succeeds in constructing an air-ship powerful enough to raise itself into the air with its motor, he will not know how to maneuver so heavy a machine, and so will not be able to avoid a catastrophe, since he will have no opportunity for preliminary practise? Ordinary common sense will enable us to affirm that if this problem is some day solved, it will not be until after progressive trials with the aid of small captive machines. Thus there should be built successively: 1. Very light flying-machines having to carry only an electric motor, the generating dynamo resting on the ground, so that the machinist can control the device from a distance like a dirigible torpedo; 2. more powerful machines capable of carrying not only the motor but the aeronaut, the generator still remaining on the earth. As this second type of machine is perfected, they can be made more and more powerful and capable of raising increasing loads. These could then be of great use, especially in the defense of besieged places.

"When we shall be able, by successive improvements, to steer and control properly a machine that is able to lift a quantity of ballast at least equal to the weight of a primary motor, then we may dream of approaching the solution of the complete problem, that is to say, the replacement of the electric-motor plus the ballast by a primary motor and the setting free of the hitherto captive machine.

"Hardy inventors might perhaps obtain valuable results by embarking at once on their machines at peril of their lives and starting off with the second type of air-ship instead of the first; but those who try to start off at once with their primary motors on a free ship will certainly be killed if the machine is strong enough to raise itself, for they will be unable to steer it."

Translation made for THE LITERARY DIGEST.

THE SUN'S INFLUENCE ON THE WEATHER.

THIS is a subject about which there has been no end of discussion during the past fifty years. Some astronomers, among whom is Sir Norman Lockyer, have persistently asserted that the cycle of variation in the sun's activity, made evident to the eye by progressive changes in the number of sunspots, corresponds to various terrestrial cycles, especially in the weather. He now finds additional evidence that his position is correct, and he has just presented it before the Royal Society of Great Britain in a paper on "Solar Activity during the Period 1833-1900," in which the records of the number and area of sunspots are analyzed and compared during the last two-thirds of the nineteenth century. Says The Electrical World and Engineer (November 23), in a notice of Sir Norman's paper:

"The results go to show that the sun may be regarded as a variable star, its luminous radiation undergoing periodic variation within a small range. The mean time separating maximum or minimum of sunspots is well known to be about eleven years, and at the present time we are just about the epoch of the sunspot minimum. Superposed upon the 11-year maximum-minimum period there is, according to Lockyer's analysis, a further period of approximately 35 years. The course of magnetic variations continued from year to year seems to indicate in a corresponding manner the influence of both the 11-year cycle and a 35-year cycle. An analysis of frequency of the aurora borealis is stated also to show the existence of a 35-year cycle.

"The most interesting circumstance, however, to which attention is called, is the agreement of this 35-year period of terrestrial sunspot variation with the results of terrestrial climatology, as investigated of recent years by Bruckner. It seems that Professor Bruckner has made a careful examination of meteorological records during the past 200 years, and finds, as a general result, that there is a small periodical variation in the climates over the whole earth, the mean length of this period being 34.8 ± 0.7 years. Moreover, the curve of variation in annual rainfall shown, as taken from Bruckner's work, closely follows the 35-year sunspot variation curve, indicating a general slight increase in rainfall during the years of maximum sunspot development, or when the solar radiation is at its minimum, and, on the contrary, a reduced annual rainfall when the sunspot development is least in the 35-year cycles. At the present time we appear to be in the neighborhood of a minimum rainfall on this cycle. It is stated that a 33- or 34-year cycle period has been independently traced the climatology of Sydney, Australia, and also a 35-year period in the movements of glaciers by Professor Richter.

"It is, of course, only reasonable to expect that cyclic changes in the sun's activity should repeat themselves in the earth's meteorology, but the fact that the changes in the seasons are so slight as to escape ordinary observation from decade to decade is sufficient to show how small is the range of variation in either. It is very common to hear people speak casually about variations in climate which have occurred at some particular locality to their own knowledge within the limits of their lives, but in every case a careful examination of meteorological records made during the period referred to fails to establish any such supposed variation, and the mean annual temperature or rainfall is a wonderfully steady quantity in the long run, altho so manifestly subject to numerous temporary fluctuations. The predetermination of weather and climate is necessarily of enormous consequence and value to a community, and if the 35-year period of Sir Norman Lockyer is confirmed by subsequent analysis, it must prove of great interest, even if the range of variation be minute."

SOME AUTOMOBILE RECORDS SMASHED.

THE speeders of motor-cars do not seem to heed the warnings that their insistence on the racing type of machine will interfere with the career of the automobile as a useful vehicle. Possibly they recollect that horse-racing has not killed off the carriage-horses and the dray-horses, and argue that machines need not be all of one type any more than draught-animals. At any rate road-records were smashed right and left in Brooklyn on November 16, in what The Scientific American calls "the most sensational automobile one-mile speed tests ever made on either side of the Atlantic." The tests, which were made on a section of the Ocean Parkway, were witnessed by over 25,000 persons. Says the paper just quoted (November 30):

"A mile a minute on the highway is no longer an automobile dream; for no less than three of the contestants finished within that time. Fournier, the winner of the Paris-Berlin race, twice broke the world's record, and was closely followed by Foxhall P. Keene, A. C. Bostwick, and A. L. Riker. . . . The contestants went over the course singly, their times being taken at the start and at the finish by members of the Second Signal Corps,

ELECTRIC RACING AUTOMOBILE.

Courtesy of Electrical World and Engineer (New York).

U. S. A. Over a mile was allowed to the chauffeurs to get under way, and about a quarter of a mile to slow up after passing the finish line. The race was a contest by some of the best chauffeurs in the world for the one-mile record.

"At his first attempt Fournier, in his 40-horse-power Mors racer, sped over the mile in the remarkable time of 52 seconds. Not content with this performance, he returned to the start for another trial, and succeeded in reducing the record made but a few minutes before by one-fifth of a second. Foxhall P. Keene, in a Mors carriage exactly similar to that of Fournier, covered the mile in 54 seconds. American-built vehicles were not much behindhand. A. C. Bostwick, in a 40-horse-power Winton gasoline carriage, made the mile in 56½ seconds at the first trial, and in 1 minute ½ seconds at the second trial.

"Good as the road undoubtedly was, it was not altogether free from slight, almost unnoticeable depressions and projections. At a speed of twenty miles or even thirty miles an hour an automobile will ride over a slight elevation with no appreciable effect. But at the enormous velocity of nearly seventy miles an hour the carriages could not yield to the slight, scarcely perceptible hollows, and at times every wheel would be clear of the road. And yet, despite this peculiar effect, they kept their course with remarkable precision and with no evident oscillation. . . .

"That a gasoline carriage would make the best record was inevitable. But no one foresaw that an electric car would also lower the previous world's record of 1 minute 6½ seconds made by Winton. The carriage in question was designed and driven by Mr. A. L. Riker, and was a distinctly American type of machine. It was a racing machine pure and simple, an electromobile reduced to its lowest terms, a wheeled frame and a battery, with seats for two men arranged in tandem. . . . With a start of only one-quarter of a mile, Mr. Riker covered the mile in 1 minute and 3 seconds, the armatures of his motors making about 3,300 revolutions per minute. The exact power of the vehicle has not been determined; but Mr. Riker informs us that the horse-power is between 15 and 20. When it is considered that the French carriages of Fournier and Keene were equipped with motors rated at 40 horse-power, Mr. Riker's performance is all the more remarkable. At the same time it is but just to the other vehicles to state that while they were all capable of long-distance touring, the electric machine was capable of maintaining its maximum effort apparently for only a single dash over the mile course. It was towed to the course, towed back to the starting-point after its trial, and charged its batteries immediately before its trial run from an adjoining electric car. . . .

"These are the most remarkable contests ever run on a public highway. They have shown that only a specially built locomotive engine running on steel rails can beat a modern racing automobile."

THE VIOLET CURE.

THE more credulous portion of the British public has been interested in recent press accounts of a so-called "violet-cure" for cancer. According to the papers a tumor of a tonsil, the diagnosis of which was "made certain by microscopic examination of a small portion removed," was "cured" by applying fomentations made from an infusion of green violet leaves. Within a week of the application much of the swelling had disappeared and all pain had ceased, and in a fortnight the "cancer of the tonsil" had entirely disappeared. Says The Lancet (November 23), in discussing this reported cure:

"The whole importance of the story depends on the accuracy of the diagnosis of epithelioma. All who are familiar with the clinical signs of a malignant disease of the tonsil can easily believe that it is not difficult to mistake deep-seated inflammation of the region for a malignant growth. As to the microscopic examination, the arrangement of the epithelium of a normal tonsil may easily resemble the epithelial down-growths of an epithelioma, and the resemblance is still more striking when chronic inflammation is present. The history of the case points to a very natural error of diagnosis. The violet leaf, by the way, figures not infrequently among the recipes of the old Anglo-Norman writers whose manuscripts are preserved in the British Museum. In modern pharmacopœias the violet is noted for its cathartic and emetic qualities, or, to speak more accurately, the Viola tricolor, or pansy, possesses these useful attributes. The dog violet also is vaguely recorded in an old edition of Balfour's 'Botany' (1854) to have been at some time or other prescribed for 'skin disease.' In the age of the Plantagenets monkish medical writers treated most diseases with the violet, whether dog, pansy, or sweet March they do not state. Intermingled with a multiplicity of other ingredients the modest flower was used to treat 'a streyness of the hert,' an illness akin, we may suppose, to dyspepsia. It was said to be good also for the stone, and if a broken fragment of bone had to be expelled from the flesh the violet, with other herbs, was considered most useful. Into these old medical mixtures the violet was always introduced in 'a good handful,' and we are at liberty to suppose that its pleasant perfume, in an age when contrasts were much insisted on, was supposed to work wonders against noisome suppurative ailments. The Anglo-Norman writer of Manuscript B in Henslow's valuable account of early English recipes gravely mentions that a decoction of violet leaves, in conjunction with several other herbs, will enable a sufferer to slay the worm in a sore after its presence has been duly discovered by the all-night application of a piece of new cheese. The violet leaf, according to the same forgotten scribe, . . . is useful in the process of wound-healing, but the medieval authorities never thought of 'curing canker' by means of violets. Nor do we think that such a method of therapy will find a place in twentieth-century pharmacology."

THE EBB AND FLOW OF LIFE.

THAT life is a variable phenomenon we all know; both plants and animals grow and change constantly. It has been reserved for a recent Swiss investigator, M. J. Gaule, of Zurich, to show that its changes are periodic—not steady. The vital functions ebb and flow like the tide, in several definite periods, some of which correspond to external changes like the alternation of day and night, but others to internal chemical alterations of whose causes we are ignorant. It is believed by M. Gaule, however, that his discoveries render inaccurate and misleading the old comparison of the organism with a machine for receiving, transforming, and giving out energy. The ebb and flow whose existence he has established show, he thinks, that the body is more than mere mechanism. M. Gaule's investigations, which were described at length by their author to the International Congress of Physiology at Turin in September last, are noticed in an article contributed to La Nature (Paris, November 9), by M. N. Vaschide. Says this writer:

"The law of the conservation of energy, which governs the mechanism of machines, has also been regarded as applicable to organisms; from this fact we should have an additional point of view—and a fundamental one—for the comparison of the organism and the machine. The author does not wish to invalidate this law, neither does he wish to introduce a vitalist doctrine into physiology; but he believes the comparison of the living organism to a machine to be erroneous. To justify his doubts, he refers to experimental work on frogs, which ought to set the biologists to thinking.

"The invariability of the organs and cells is not, according to Gaule, categorically demonstrated; but it is generally asserted, and it is usually considered that organic changes take place only during long periods. He believes that these periods of change are not so long, after all. If we study the changes in the organs of the frog, as Gaule has done, from the point of view of the increase and decrease of the cells, we shall see that there is a yearly periodicity. He has also shown that the fat in certain organs of the frog diminishes during the night and increases by day: there is thus a daily periodicity here. In the third place, the author maintained at the Berne congress, ten years ago, that the muscles of the hare grow for fifteen days, then dwindle for fifteen, and so on. The annual and daily periods appear to be due to exterior changes, but the semi-monthly period can be related only to the vital processes."

To ascertain the causes of this last period, Gaule studied the total number of blood corpuscles contained in the frog, and the result was the confirmation of his views regarding a semi monthly period. M. Vaschide writes further:

"As the variations are enormous, in one case from 1,000,000 to 35,000,000 to each grain's weight of the body, we must conclude, with the author, that the blood is in a continual state of transformation, its cells being modified throughout the whole year. At least twelve times a year is this transformation completed. The cells, then, are not fixed, and the organism does not behave like a machine that transmits rigidly the forces communicated to it. The organism transforms itself by its own vital processes.

We may say that the organism is a chemical laboratory whose walls are built up by the reactions that take place within it, and as these reactions change, the walls are in continual transformation. In other words, according to Gaule, life undergoes periodic evolution, a phenomenon which does not point toward a mechanical operation. Chemical modifications enter into the phenomenon according to laws that are not yet determined. Biological life must be the theater of chemical evolutions and revolutions, . . . whose periodicity appears in various ways, and which perhaps some day will clear up for us the mystery of rhythm which stands out in each manifestation of life—thought, organic structure, and functional mechanism. The 'circulation of life,' as it is understood by Gaule, is entering a new scientific phase. It is no longer a question of the continual and infinite transformation of the living organism, a conception that corresponds to the old comparison with a machine regulated by the nervous system, but of the variation of organic life in definite periods, regulated capriciously according to organic formulas of chemical origin."—Translation made for THE LITERARY DIGEST.

A NEW CURE FOR ALCOHOLISM.

THE decided and peculiar views of Dr. Archdall Reid on the drink question have been more than once the subject of discussion among temperance reformers. We have had occasion to quote in these columns his contention that the drink habit, by killing off those who can not survive a steady alcoholic diet, is making our race immune to its effects and so is working out its own cure. This position he takes still more strongly, supplementing it by assertions and suggestions along the same line, in a book just published entitled "Alcoholism: a Study in Heredity" (London, 1901), in which he departs from his laissez-faire policy and advocates assisting nature in her effort to get rid of the alcoholics. This he would do by punishing every drunkard who shall beget a child. Mr. Reid's policy has been satirized as aiming at a condition in which civilized man will be "pickled" in alcohol without injury; but his idea is rather that, when we have assisted nature to eliminate the alcoholic, the remnant will have no craving for alcohol and will constitute a temperate, if not a total abstaining, race. We quote a few paragraphs from a review of Dr. Reid's book in The Hospital (November 23). Says the reviewer:

"This book is a veritable trailing of the coat in the Donnybrook Fair of teetotal controversy, and we shall be considerably surprised if some of our total abstinence friends do not tread on the tail of it. Its object appears to be, in the first place, to trace the causes of intemperance on scientific lines, and in the second to indicate what its author calls 'a practical remedy.' As to the first point he draws a wide distinction between drinking and drunkenness. Men drink alcoholic solutions, he says, for three distinct reasons: to satisfy thirst, to gratify taste, and to produce a distinct effect upon the brain; and it is only the drinking which is done for the latter of these which is a cause of drunkenness. Sober people do not keep sober by dint of self-control. Their sobriety is no particular credit to them. If they do not drink it is merely that they are not tempted so to do. Self-control is then a subordinate affair in the causation of sobriety, lack of temptation or desire being the principal factor. What, then, is the cause of that craving for alcohol which leads to drunkenness? Here we come into the midst of the argument, and this is the leading topic of the book. Dr. Archdall Reid says that every drunkard must be so constituted as to be capable of enjoying deep indulgence, whether in the form of positive pleasure or as a means of relieving physical and mental discomfort or pain, and this faculty, this capacity for enjoying drink, 'is certainly in-born.' Of course there are other factors in the case, such as the man's knowledge of alcohol, his 'recollection of the pleasurable sensations which former acts of drunkenness aroused in him,' and the fact that 'the more a drinker indulges in drink the more, within limits, does he crave for drink.' For all that, the potential drunkard is born, not made; and thus there are two methods of temperance reform open to us—what may be called nature's method by the elimination of the excessive drinker, and the temperance reformer's method by the elimination of the drink. These methods are plainly antagonistic. If drink be abolished, the potential drunkard is preserved; if the potential drunkard is to be eliminated, this can only be done by means of the evil effects of drink upon him. The question then is, which method ought we to adopt? Which is the more practicable? Which offers the more certain and easy success? To this Dr. Reid answers without hesitation, nature's method, the elimination of the potential drunkard. His solution of the problem is, then, that drunkards should be prevented from reproducing their like. 'If drunkards were taken before magistrates, sitting in open or secret session as the accused preferred, and, on conviction, were warned that the procreation of children would subject them to this or that penalty, say a month's imprisonment, the birth-rate of drunkards would certainly fall immensely.' This, then, is Dr. Archdall Reid's great scheme. In the mean time, as he says, there need be no relaxation of temperance effort, so far as it involves the saving of individual drunkards, provided always that we forbid children to them. But we must not abolish drink. If we did, we could not discover the drunkard! This is, of course, a little drawback, but as 'we must in any case have drunkards till no one enjoys being drunk' the drawback is not so serious as one might suppose."

WHAT SHOULD OLD PEOPLE EAT?

AN essay on "Diet in Relation to Age and Activity" has just been published by Sir Henry Thompson, the British authority on foods and feeding. From this The Hospital (November 2) condenses the following advice to elderly persons regarding their diet:

"What is called 'indigestion' as a rule does not depend upon any fault of the digestive apparatus, but solely upon its being called upon to accomplish work which is beyond its powers; so that the remedy is not to be found in the gastric juices of the pig, or in the ingestion of the various chemically prepared messes advertised as being digestible or as being demands made upon the stomach to its capacity for fulfilling them. He [Sir Henry] would leave the pepsin and the messes to be applied, if at all, by skilled physicians in cases of illness which may possibly require them, and lays down, as of practically universal application, the principle that the elderly person neither requires nor can digest as much food as the young person, and that this principle should govern the arrangements of his life. The total amount of his food should be steadily diminished as age advances, and this total amount should be divided among a larger number of meals than were sufficient for his wants in former days. In other words, not only should the entire daily demand upon the digestion be diminished, but the demand made at any one time should be diminished also. It is commonly asserted, and is by many believed, that the average duration of human life has been increased by dentistry; but Sir Henry inclines to the opinion that the loss or failure of teeth is one of nature's kindly warnings that the use of them, and by implication the use of foods which require their active exercise, should be diminished in corresponding proportion. The principle which he applies to food, he applies also to all the forms of alcohol; and his contemptuous rejection of the idea that 'wine is the milk of old age,' reminds us of Sir James Paget's frequent saying that this or that was 'as false as a proverb.' Sir Henry's little book should win for him the gratitude of all who are approaching those slopes down which he has descended so gracefully; and it has the rare merit that, in the words of a great moralist, the preacher 'is the example of his own sermon.'"

THE RELIGIOUS WORLD.

THE JEW WHO IS NOT A JEW.

THE condition of things which is found among the wealthy Jews in England furnishes, Mr. G. S. Street thinks, an interesting but deplorable paradox. What this condition is he describes (National Review, November) in the way of a comparison between the past and present as follows:

"The poor Jew fasted or ate dry bread when he could not get meat which had been duly killed; the rich Jew eats meat unclean to his fathers because the other is not served at the Savoy Hotel. The poor Jew bound his phylacteries round his arm in the sight of the heathen; the rich Jew is ashamed of the Day of Atonement. The poor Jew suffered persecution even unto burning rather than profess belief in a religion he despised; the rich Jew goes to a Christian church because it looks well in the eyes of indifferent neighbors. The poor Jew gloried in his race when it was most despised and rejected; the rich Jew—now that no one but a fool in this country despises his race—changes his name and hopes to be taken for a Scotchman. The poor Jew clung to his heritage tho the world battered him; the rich Jew gives it up to win a contemptuous smile. The poor Jew was a strenuous man, worthy in the main, despite his faults, of a glorious past; the rich Jew is a sham, barely worthy of an ignoble present."

Mr. Street is not himself a Jew. He writes as "a Gentile whose imagination has for long been stirred by this wonderful history, who has admiration and sympathy for the best racial qualities of the Jew, and who is anxious to disclaim both ignorant prejudice and ridiculous patronage." He is amazed that any Jew can wish, as "a large and increasing number of prosperous English Jews seem to wish," to forego the heritage which has descended to him in the history of his race. He writes further:

"How can he remember that the prayer his grandfather, or even his father, said on the eve of every Sabbath was said before the Captivity and said ever since, and then wish to dissociate himself from it all? I allow for the advance of thought and know that it may be impossible to a Jew to accept the creed of his fathers. But, after all, that creed in its essentials is simply a broad theism, with the addendum that a particular race was chosen to express the will of God upon earth, and remembering how many scholars can still accept the far more complex dogmas of Christianity I find it hard to believe that the ordinary stockbroker is intellectually convinced that Judaism is untrue. True that its ceremonialism is involved and irksome, but still that ceremonialism is intimate and kindly; it sanctifies the joys as well as the sorrows of life; it even ordains temperate good cheer as on occasion a duty. I should feel kindly to it if I were a Jew. If I were a Jew I should even hesitate to abandon my kosher food, seeing that the sanitary laws of my people have kept it vital in every extreme of want. However, I can understand he may give all that up, both because it is inconvenient and for the better reason that being a citizen of England he wishes to live as an Englishman. But to let it be understood that he wishes his race to be forgotten—that indeed amazes me. And it takes such a wretched, material, middle-class sort of prosperity to promote this apostasy. The Spanish Jews, who were real aristocrats, owning broad lands and holding high offices, gloried in their race, and when the Inquisition forced some of them—many preferred to be burnt—to profess Christianity, they remained secret Jews, and again in many cases after generations proclaimed their Judaism when they could. It is said, I hope truly, that Benjamin Disraeli was of such a family. He, to be sure, tho the observance of Protestantism was part of the game he played, was far from being ashamed of his race. But now an ordinary stockbroking English Jew, with no Inquisition and nothing worth calling public opinion against him, will change his name and wish to be taken for an Englishman."

The article is brought to a conclusion in these words:

"When a Jew gives up all his customs, changes his name, and goes to Christian churches, tho his race be indestructible in him, he has consciously given up the fight, and struck the flag forefathers carried through persecution and disdain, selling matches by day and studying the Rabbis at night, elbowed and mocked by Christian rowdies, in imagination sitting with Abraham their father and Moses their teacher on thrones in heaven. And their grandchildren are ashamed of them! It is a pitiful present to follow a noble past, and it amazes me—a Gentile—beyond words to express my feeling. Has the spirit that medieval kings could not break succumbed to the modern snob? What dirge will the daughters of Israel sing to lament this captivity?"

In editorial reference to Mr. Street's article, the Baltimore Jewish Comment (November 22) agrees with the sentiments it expresses, and says that they apply almost as aptly to the American as to the English Jew:

"One of the most patent facts in the march of Jewish events during the last half of the last century has been the strong tendency of the Jew to get away from the old Jewish integument and to make a point of approaching the non-Jew in every phase of life, the operating reason being the repudiation of the old Jewish isolation, with its invidious conspicuousness. From certain points of view the change was a healthy and necessary one, for the Jews are too progressive to be dominated by a philosophy of things that the world has outgrown. But the clean sweep that was made brushed away all the old excellences so completely that it is hard for some of us to imagine that the Jewish life of the past had any permanent spiritual quality, any quality whose preservation were worth while. Jews and Christians wonder why it was that the Jew kept his religion when he could not keep it, and doesn't when he can. When Schechter was in America he expressed surprise at what he then considered the failure of the Russian Jew to be faithful to his religion. 'I thought,' said he, 'that the people who fled from Russia on account of religious persecution would seize the opportunity here to show their regard for their faith.' The American Jew displays, perhaps, the greatest indifference to what his forefathers regarded as religiously necessary."

THE CLAIM OF PAGANISM UPON CHRISTIANITY.

IN a series of articles which grew out of his recent journey in the Far East, the Rt. Rev. Henry Codman Potter, D.D., Bishop of New York, takes a view in perspective of the people and the religions of India, and discusses the attitude of Christian civilization toward them. The articles appeared in The Churchman (Prot. Episc., November 9, 16), and in them the writer asks: What are the people of India like? What do they believe? What of their future? What does religion, with them, stand for, and how far do we of the West understand them or their beliefs, and do justice to either? The bishop proceeds to the consideration of these questions as follows:

"These are questions which, especially as they relate to Christian missions, must needs interest us. Indeed, what more fascinating vista could there be than that which opens before him who, to-day, turns his feet, on whatever errand, to those lands and races which, of late, in such wonderful ways, are having all their doors flung open to the world! Whatever else was true of the men who, as missionaries, first set on foot that mighty invasion of the heathen world which from such small beginnings has grown to such noble and stately proportions, this certainly was not true, that they had then advanced to such a recognition of the presence of God even in heathendom as led them, first of all, to seek for sympathetic contact with it. We can not read the story of what they said, and of how they wrought, without recognizing, in all early missionary enterprises, in modern times, a very imperfect apprehension of the fact that God has not left Himself anywhere without witness among men, and that their little systems who dwell or have dwelt in pagan lands, whether of philosophy or religion, while but broken lights that were destined to have only their brief day—in that most like so many of our own!—were, after all, yet broken lights of God; dim glimmers of the fuller splendors of a coming day. It is in this, on the other hand, that I think our noblest progress has been made. The comparative study of religions has brought to light, for every student who has pursued it with thoroughness and candor, at least two clear convictions—one that God has had, in all human history, many ways of revealing Himself; and the other that there is, after all, no wholly right method of missionary endeavor other than that which St. Paul pursued on Mars Hill when, as he passed by, he saw an altar to the unknown God. Not ridicule, nor denunciation, nor contempt, was his method; but recognition—recognition of the deep want of man and of the often honest, tho often blundering, methods of men who sought to find an answer to it!"

Bishop Potter's visit in the East has removed from his mind many traditions and impressions in which he was brought up regarding the religious beliefs and domestic life of the Orientals. He says:

"I was so fortunate, more than once, as to make the acquaintance of native East Indians of distinguished rank and varied culture. More than once they introduced me to their families and presented me to their wives and daughters. In all such cases they were, I beg to say, persons who retained their ancient religion, Buddhist, Mohammedan, or Parsee, as the case might be, and who had no keener enthusiasm than that which cherished their national, racial, and religious traditions. They answered questions about their homes and children, and the laws that governed them, and they gave me chapter and verse in their sacred writings for what they told me in regard to them. Now, then, let us look at some of these testimonies as indicating—not what may have been, and doubtless was, a degraded practise, here and there—for if we were judged by these our own records in the courts of the civilized world would not be an unsullied one—but the law or rule of life set for many millions of people in its authoritative documents."

Bishop Potter then recites some of the laws of Manu—the semi-divine law-giver of the East—which define the place of woman in the economy of Hindu life, and he quotes the statements of Swami Abhedananda (see THE LITERARY DIGEST, October 19) regarding Hindu marriage customs and the practise of suttee, or the self-burning of widows. He asserts that these Vedic precepts and this testimony of the distinguished Oriental scholar more truly represent the religious spirit of India and the customs and beliefs of its people than does the ill-advised, wholesale denunciation which this alien race and faith often receive. There is a widespread misapprehension in Christian lands regarding the people of the Far East, according to Bishop Potter. He has this to say regarding it:

"It has had a threefold cause: in ignorance; in a not altogether unamiable passion for exaggeration; and most of all, I am persuaded, in a constitutional incapacity on the part of the Western to understand the processes of the Eastern mind.

"Ignorance, pure and simple, has been a potent factor in our misapprehensions about Oriental foreigners. Those who have lived longest among them will tell you of that secretive, if not furtive, habit of mind and of speech which so widely prevails in the East; by which we, with our all but hopeless Western literalism, are so easily misled, and which offers, I may add, so strong a temptation to one with an often merely playful impulse to amuse himself at the expense of another's credulity. . . .

"And then, next to ignorance in the Western observer of Eastern peoples, has been the inevitable tendency to exaggeration. The huge inductions from small groups of facts, the hasty generalizations upon the basis of a chance incident; the desire for dramatic effect in literature or in missionary addresses; the cheerful willingness to believe the worst and not the best of one whom we call indeed our brother or our sister, but whom by no possibility we could be induced to treat as such; the knowledge that if one comes back from a foreign land without a traveler's tale, painted in strong colors and of tragic proportions, he is not quite fulfilling the expectations of the home public; all this, together with the further fact that books and discourses about foreigners are not criticized, as they should be, by foreigners, has made it easy for the modern peripatetic philosopher to create a monster in literary portraiture, and then persuade us to accept it as a photograph!

"And then, finally, there has been a great deal that has been brought to the West from the East which is the product of that absolute incapacity, on the part of the Western, to understand Eastern mental processes. The East thinks pictorially; the West literally and logically. The East abhors a strict construction of language; the West lusts after it with a strange and stupid opacity as to all the traditions of the language which it interprets. The East continually employs indirections, without a thought of deliberate untruthfulness. The West forever construes them as if they could have no other motive than to deceive. Under such circumstances the wonder is, not that the West and the East have so often misunderstood one another, but rather that they have understood one another at all. . . . In all those new and largely untrodden realms whose portals are opening to us to-day, there is much to deplore, but much, let us not forget it, to respect. Some of us here can recall the smile of mingled mirth and derision with which, a few years ago, it was announced that the Mohammedans were preparing to send missionaries and establish a Mohammedan mission in the city of New York. We were so superior in our Occidental virtue that the whole thing seemed a huge joke. And yet, thus far, Christianity has utterly failed to control the vice of drunkenness. The great cities of this land are dominated, not by their churches or their universities, but by their saloons. . . . But Mohammedanism in Oriental lands does control it. Said Isaac Taylor, after declaring that 'Mohammedanism stands in fierce opposition to gambling and makes a gambler's testimony invalid in law,' 'Islam is the most powerful total abstinence association in the world.'

"And so, I repeat, we may see our calling. Goethe declared long ago that 'he who knows but one language knows none'—I commend the maxim to those zealous gentlemen who are kicking the classics out of our colleges and substituting for them courses of botany and civil engineering—and Max Müller applied the same maxim to religion. Heirs of a great faith, it belongs to us to learn from it so much at least of the law of the brotherhood of humanity as shall enable us to treat other faiths, other philosophies, other manners than our own with courteous consideration. And then, charged with great treasures, beckoned forward by great examples, humbled and instructed by past blunders and failures, to turn to the new and larger tasks that are before us with a high hope and a great patience!"

THE RIGHT TO HERESY.

IN his latest book, "The Rights of Man" (reviewed last week in THE LITERARY DIGEST), Dr. Lyman Abbott undertakes to classify human rights and duties by principles of division that may be considered as practical rather than theoretical and abstract. He discusses rights in particular—political rights, industrial rights, educational rights, religious rights, etc.—rather than rights in general—"natural" and "artificial."

In the discussion of religious rights, he takes his most positive stand. He maintains that it is the right and the duty of every man to know God in his own way, apart from the methods for doing so laid down by church, or creed, or even in the Bible.

He traces historically the growth of the doctrine that the state and church combined are to determine religious truth and to protect the community from religious error. Tho Jesus Christ came preaching that the kingdom of heaven is a spiritual kingdom and would proceed by spiritual forces, the same absolute loyalty was required by Him in the new theocracy that had been required by Jehovah in the old theocracy. By the fifth or sixth century this new theocracy had become a hierarchical organization, teaching a philosophy of religion, and requiring the same loyalty that the old Hebrew commonwealth had demanded. But it required loyalty, not to an invisible king, but to a visible hierarchy and a visible creed. During the Middle Ages, while the church in theory never inflicted penalties for heresy, leaving it to the state to protect the community from false doctrine, it did determine what is true and what is false. Such was the growth of the doctrine, which rests upon four postulates: (1) That the fundamental and preeminent need of humanity is the need of religious truth; (2) that there is a system of comprehensive truth which can be known, and every man ought to be enabled to learn it; (3) that if every individual is left to find out truth for himself, and to preach truth or error as he pleases, the foundations of accuracy and certitude in the whole realm of religious teaching are destroyed; (4) that if the state has the power, it should punish the teacher of error. If not, the church should punish him by turning him out of its membership. Dr. Abbott then proceeds explicitly to repudiate this doctrine "in all its parts." He writes:

"I deny that a knowledge of religious truth is the great desideratum of life. I deny that there is or can be any complete or comprehensive system of religious truth. I deny that there is or can be any organization which can furnish such a system of religious truth. And, therefore, of course I deny that there can be any right, either in church or state, to punish, by either physical or moral penalty, the man who dissents from the commonly received religious opinion."

Nailing these theses of negation to the door of the modern church, this dissenter from established theology states affirmatively his view of religion:

"What is religion? Max Müller defines it as 'such a perception of the manifestations of the Infinite as produces a moral influence on the conduct and character of man.' The perception of the Infinite is not religion, that is theology; a recognition of the moral relation of man with his fellow-man is not religion, that is ethics; but such a perception as enlarges and enriches the moral life and conduct of man is religion."

Dr. Abbott then, in the language of modern ethical thought, discusses the theme of "How to Know God":

"The quest of humanity is after this perception of the Infinite. It is a quest, not after truth about God, but after God Himself. . . . Knowing a man is not the same as knowing about a man. Knowing God is not the same as knowing about God. The office of religion is not to tell men about God; it is to bring them into personal acquaintance with God; it is to bring them into a perception of the Infinite Himself. Truth about God is some one else's perception of the Infinite. It is not the perception of a perception that is religion; it is the perception of God. It is not the understanding of what some one else says about Him; it is acquaintance with Him."

Dr. Abbott accordingly declares that "the Bible can not take the place of God. Faith in the Bible is not religion; faith in God is religion." So, too, he maintains that "faith in the church is not religion." All that the church can do is to report the experience of men who have had religion. We quote again:

"Acceptance of a creed is not religion. The creed is something which the philosopher, more or less skilfully, has wrought out of the experiences of those who have perceived the Infinite. To perceive their perception is not religion.

"This is religion—the personal perception of the Infinite. This is the quest of humanity,—not a complete knowledge, not a comprehensive system, but God himself,—nothing less than God Himself."

John Henry Newman is quoted to the effect that the difficulty in the way of using private judgment in forming or choosing a religion is that "private judgment leads different minds in such different directions." Dr. Abbott rejoins:

"This is the glory of it—the splendor of it! Send ten thousand men in different directions, each to look with his own eyes, feel with his own heart, realize in his own experience some aspect of the divine character, and they will bring back from their quest ten thousand manifestations of God, each that manifestation which he is capable of receiving."

With characteristic catholicity, Dr. Abbott thus gathers all the "seekers after God" into the scope of his broad theology:

"All creeds have some truth in them; no creeds have all truth in them. I am almost prepared to say that it would be safe to believe all the affirmations of all the creeds, and to reject all their denials. Whenever a body of devout men have come saying, 'We have found this in the Infinite,' their report is presumptively true. Whenever they have come back saying, 'We have not found this,' it does not in the least indicate that what they have not found may not be there."

THE STATUS OF RELIGION IN GERMANY.

GERMANY, the land of the Reformation and the home of the philosophy of religion, the chief center of historical investigation and of criticism in religious matters, is of necessity a place of interest wherever and whenever there is discussion of religious problems. It is said by Prof. Rudolf Eucken, of the University of Jena, in the December Forum that the last three decades of the nineteenth century have witnessed a complete revolution of religious sentiment in that nation of intellectual activity. The change, in his view, has been clearly for the strengthening of the church, Protestant and Catholic, and for the permanency and wider recognition of religion. He prefaces what he has to say in explanation of the transformation by sketching briefly some earlier conditions of theological thought in Germany. At the beginning of the nineteenth century—the period to which belong poets like Schiller and Goethe and savants like Kant and Hegel—the attitude of the German people toward the religion of the time, this writer says, was not unfriendly:

"But it was not in the ecclesiastical, or even in the specifically Christian, religion that inward conviction then found expression. Perhaps the term Pantheism, first employed by Krause, best expresses the religious attitude of our classical epoch. Every form of creation appeared to be comprehended in one being, and to be founded in divine wisdom—a wisdom operating everywhere, not from without, but as an emanation of the inmost being of every form of creation; and this wisdom found its fullest expression in the free and rational human organism, i.e., in man. The conception and development of this idea everywhere served to operate as an invigorating and ennobling factor. In the midst of our temporal existence religion disclosed to view an infinite perspective, and brought human nature into relation with the invisible, but endless, chain of existence. Such a religion could afford to dispense with dogmas and ceremonies. It recognized no differences of creed, but appealed directly to man as such."

This religion of a universal humanity, we are told, despite the breadth of ideas and refinement of sentiment peculiar to it, occupied no place in the public life, and religion was regarded as essential to the ignorant only. But there came shortly a powerful factor of change, produced by the Napoleonic wars, fraught with such direct calamity to Germany. Amid the sufferings and sacrifices they entailed, the tone of the nation became graver, and hence there arose a greater susceptibility to religion in the older sense—"religion conceived as a redemption from need and misery by means of a supernatural agency." After the wars of liberation, there came another change. It was due, we are told, to the support given the Protestant Church by the Government, and to the latter's policy of rejecting all innovations in religious affairs which concerned the former. There was, says Professor Eucken, a resulting hostility to any such course, from the German people, who had "regained not only their political, but also, to a large extent, their personal independence." He continues:

"Furthermore, it is evident that the support thus given to the church was not likely to win the favorable opinion of those who had participated in the great intellectual and political movements of the time. By these, not only the church, but every form of religion, had now come to be regarded as a hindrance to the realization of their accepted political and national ideas. . . . The influence of religion upon public life waned, and an increasing apathy, if not an actual antipathy to all religion, gradually spread within the educated circles of the nation. Literature also assumed a repellent attitude, if not toward religion, at least toward the church; and the representation of religious subjects vanished almost entirely from the domain of the fine arts."

Here Professor Eucken calls attention to the contrast between conditions in religious affairs in the eras of which he has been speaking and those which he finds existing to-day:

"The growth of religious sentiment extends beyond the pale of the church; and wherever opposition to ecclesiastical domination exists, it springs not so much from antipathy to the true interests of religion, as from a solicitude for them. Philosophy, formerly inimical to theology, is now jealously endeavoring to treat religion upon a scientific basis, and to make it an essential part of general culture. The arts, more especially painting, seek to represent the noble figures of tradition in accordance with the modern spirit; and literature also to-day affords far more space to the discussion of religious problems. . . . The spirit of skepticism in religious matters has continued to permeate the masses; but the deeper religious movement, nevertheless, continues unimpaired. The spirit of denial, once directed against religion, is to-day rapidly waning in Germany. It no longer dominates the intellectual life, nor does it constitute the characteristic of our age."

The writer proceeds to show that both outward and inward causes have contributed to bring about this transformation in religious thought in Germany. In the first place, the increased political influence of the masses is favorable to religion, or at least to the domination of the church. The constitution of the German empire, which guaranteed universal suffrage, caused a shifting of the political center of gravity, and an increase of ecclesiastical power was naturally effected, first and foremost in the Catholic Church. This growth on the part of the churches would not have been possible, however, without the cooperation of other factors, one of which was the increased activity of the church in the sphere of practical life. Even orthodoxy came to be regarded more favorably by reason of the earnestness and zeal which it displayed. Another factor which contributed to strengthen religion was the radical change effected in convictions and sentiments. Of this Professor Eucken writes:

"During the struggle for national unity large sections of the population were inspired by the conviction that a new and nobler life would begin upon the formation of the empire. But it soon became obvious that the outward successes which had been achieved had contributed nothing to the spiritual or inner life. Furthermore, a reaction against the ideals of modern culture now manifests itself among all civilized nations, and nowhere more conspicuously than in Germany. The new culture, as developed more particularly during the nineteenth century, endeavored to stimulate the powers of man and to give him a dominion over the forces of nature. To this extent it exerted an incalculable influence, and endowed life with greater variety, freedom, and mobility. At no previous period of history have the labors of man been exerted so successfully and upon so rich a field. Yet this has not always conduced to our inward welfare and to our happiness. The nineteenth century has frequently employed man as a mere tool of labor—a labor the ceaseless onward movement of which leaves no time for contemplation and quiet enjoyment. Inward culture, also, has been retarded in consequence of our incessant search for outward successes. As soon as these defects became clearly visible, a pessimistic view of life naturally arose; and it is well known how widespread this spirit has become to-day among all civilized nations.

"Now, altho pessimism is not itself a phase of religion, it tends to destroy that complacency which is a dangerous foe of religion, thus preparing the way for the progress of the latter. The disappointments which the development of modern culture has produced have been instrumental in again awakening a susceptibility to religious influences. The great and complicated enterprises of our time also frequently reveal a painful absence of moral ideals; and herein lies still another reason for the greater prominence at present given to problems of morality. In Germany, as well as in other countries, a great change of conviction has been effected in this respect."

With the awakening in Germany of the new ideas in religion, questions have presented themselves which the writer puts as follows:

"Will religion, while recognizing a progressive development, be able to preserve its eternal nature, and succeed in warding off a destructive relativism? Will historic criticism permit to remain intact those fundamental truths without which a religion is inconceivable? How great a task is here assigned to modern Christianity, which must undertake to clarify, to confirm, and to deepen new truths in order to present to humanity a tangible creed!

"The relation of religion to the natural sciences also presents serious difficulties. The infinitude of the universe, the eternal laws which operate throughout nature, the natural evolution from organic forms, the dependence of the spiritual upon the corporeal existence—all these truths are rapidly spreading; and they are nowhere more frequently employed as controversial arguments by the adversaries of religion than in Germany. The faithful, on the other hand, maintain that these changes do not affect the kernel of religion, and that, by presenting a larger and grander view of life, they will in fact ultimately conduce to its progress. Nevertheless, the problem has become far more complicated; and great changes, both material and spiritual, will be necessary, in order that the new truths may be scientifically defensible and may carry with them a spiritual power of conviction.

"The internal condition of religion is, therefore, in a state of incompleteness; and there are no indications of a speedy solution of the problems involved. But an earnest desire to effect such a solution is unmistakable, particularly as regards the theologians, who are conscientiously striving to bring about a compromise between the demands of religion and the essential truths of the new culture. It suffices to mention such names as Rothe, Hase, Biedermann, Lipsius, Ritschl, Pfleiderer, and Sulzer—names respected in America also. Among philosophers, too, there is a desire to put an end to the unpleasant conflict."

Despite these conflicts within and without the sphere of the church in Germany, Professor Eucken cherishes the belief that religion to-day is a most powerful factor in German life. "Owing to the low estimate placed by the German on outward forms, the superficial observer may well be inclined to regard him as irreligious; a deeper glance, however, reveals great earnestness and zeal in religious matters." Professor Eucken says, in conclusion:

"With the Germans religion is not a matter of mere authority; nor does it constitute a separate and exclusive domain, inasmuch as it is regarded as the sole, the spiritual, essence of all life. This is the reason why the German places so much value upon freedom in religion, and why Germany became the land of the Reformation. But Catholicism also is deeper and more spiritual in Germany than among the Romanic nations. True, the desire for freedom is undoubtedly fraught with serious dangers, as it may easily lead to unsubstantiality and schisms. Yet this desire, after all, is but the expression of an earnest striving for truth."

RELIGIOUS NOTES.

A CHOIR school for the benefit of the Protestant Episcopal Cathedral has just been opened in New York City. The school, declares the New York Outlook, is not only an institution for the training of cathedral choristers, but also offers to its pupils a free general education, in consideration of their singing. Its principal is the Rev. Ernest Voorhis, A.M., Ph.D.

OF new translations of the Bible there seem to be no end. The latest version, the Twentieth Century New Testament, is not yet completed, but is being published in parts. "No such wholesale and radical upsetting of outward form and arrangement has ever been attempted," says the Minneapolis Times, which, however, concedes to the new translation considerable power and impressiveness.

THANKSGIVING Day in Berlin was made notable by the laying of the cornerstone of the new American Church by Ambassador White. Mr. Rockefeller's recent gift of 40,000 marks to the Church Fund enabled the work of building the new structure to be begun at once, and the site is already paid for. For the past seven years the American Church in Berlin has been under the care of the Rev. Dr. J. F. Dickie, formerly of Detroit. "No mention of the commendable enterprise, however brief," says The Congregationalist and Christian World (New York), "should omit recording the service rendered to the cause by the former pastor of the church and his wife, Prof. J. H. W. Stuckenberg, now resident in Cambridge, Mass."

FOREIGN TOPICS.

GREEK GOSPELS AND ATHENIAN STUDENTS.

THE agitation in a section of the Greek press for a translation into vernacular modern Greek of the Gospel narratives, after precipitating riot and bloodshed in Athens, has led to the fall of the ministry. The bewilderment of the European newspapers at the progress of events has given The Standard (London) an opportunity to enlighten public opinion as follows:

"There seems to be little mystery about the origin of the disorders. The Greeks have been threatened with an unwelcome change in their religious ritual, a point on which all peoples have ever been sensitive. The populace has become very excited, and there has been no want of agitators to profit by its anger. Students who cherish the use of the old language because it is supposed to be a standing proof of the direct connection of their race with the ancient Greeks have been joined by members of the opposition who saw a chance of damaging the Government."

After stating that "the Greek Premier and his colleagues have taken the correct course" in resigning, this paper resumes:

"A cry has been raised that the new authorized version which has been favored by Queen Olga, who was a Russian Grand Duchess, is part of a scheme to discredit the Greek Church by depriving it of the cherished privilege of using the Scriptures in the language believed to have been actually spoken by the apostles. There may be a great deal which is overstrained and unfair in all this. Her Majesty is probably quite innocent of any intrigue of this description, and has advocated the use of the modern tongue from a pure desire for the good of her subjects. But, tho we are quite prepared to believe that this is the case, we fail to see what justification there can be for ministers who failed to point out the dangers of such an innovation. It is the business of men who govern in all countries to know what their countrymen cherish and believe. M. Theotokis and his colleagues have manifestly failed to show the needful care in avoiding causes of offense. It is idle to argue that the Greeks would be better for hearing the Testament in the language of ordinary life, and not in an ancient tongue which can only be understood by those who are especially educated. They detest the change, and that is sufficient reason why it should not be attempted."

Athenian newspapers which have urged the desirability of the objectionable translations, notably the Akropolis and the Asty, do not abandon their position. This inspires The Pilot (London) to observe of the modernized Greek Testament that "if its language is that of the modern Greek newspaper, the rioters have some excuse." Le Temps (Paris) comments upon the completeness of the triumph of the Athenian students:

"They have not only secured the suspension of a metropolitan who did not excommunicate quickly enough to suit them, but they have upset a ministry which had an undoubted majority in the Chamber."

Of the new Premier, Thrasybulus Zaimis, the same authority speaks in favorable terms, altho doubt of the duration of his ministry is apparent:

"He is a moderate conservative, whose loyalty to the dynasty is beyond question. He signed the treaty of peace with Turkey, and also the financial statute. He seems to be depended upon in high circles to end an unfortunate crisis, to bestow upon Greece the moral credit which is even more essential to her than the financial credit she can not dispense with, and finally to accomplish for his country a work of consolidation, progress, and uplift."

The Gospel agitation has suggested to The Jewish Exponent (Philadelphia) a comparison of an interesting kind:

"When Mendelssohn issued his translation of the Pentateuch into German, it was greeted with bitter opposition, which, whilst it did not lead to acts of physical violence, stirred up amongst the Jews of Germany a fierce and prolonged conflict. It would appear, therefore, that the student body of the Athens of to-day, presumably representing the enlightened elements of the people, are as far advanced from a cultural standpoint as were the German Jews at the end of the eighteenth century. Old World notions die slowly, but the world does move, and the attempt to hide from the great mass of the people that which they want to know is bound to fail in Athens, or in any other place where the slightest trace of the modern spirit prevails.

"It may be that some of the opponents of the proposed translation are actuated by a desire to preserve classical Greek from virtual extinction in the land which was its home and in which its imperishable literature was created. The object is a laudable one, but there are other and better ways of accomplishing it. The Mendelssohnian translation did not lessen the knowledge of Hebrew amongst the Jews of Germany. That came as a result of religious indifference, lack of historic pride, and a failure to appreciate the value of a priceless heritage."—Translation made for THE LITERARY DIGEST.

GERMANY'S LATEST DUELING SENSATION.

JOURNALS of every shade of opinion in the Kaiser's empire find in the Insterburg duel a topic of absorbing interest. The Frankfurter Zeitung, declaring that "the more one learns of the affair the more abhorrent it becomes," states the facts of the case as follows:

"Lieutenant Blaskowitz, shortly before the time fixed for his contemplated marriage, gives his comrades a parting feast. Two of his guests take him to his door, return later to look after him, and when they try to set the slumbering man upon his feet he, without realizing what is taking place, hits out with his fists. The day following, he retains no idea of what happened. This is the whole incident, and it is laid by the two officers, without any notice to their comrade and host, before the court of honor. The latter summons Blaskowitz back to Insterburg on the eve of his wedding day. Blaskowitz does all that a man of honor can do. He was willing to offer an ample apology, and the other two should have been satisfied. But the court of honor evidently did not deem this adequate. . . . Yet if it was really decided in the Insterburg affair that, owing to an insult from a sleeping man—which serious people can scarcely regard as an insult at all—a duel was unavoidable, then a heavy responsibility rests upon those who had a share in the decision."

"The thing cries to heaven!" With these words the conservative Vossische Zeitung (Berlin) opens its editorial treatment of the theme. It proceeds:

"The affair must move every man of principle deeply. . . . Was it called for? Did this promising, highly capable officer, the true and faithful comrade, really have to go untimely to his grave? Was the unfortunate father, was the unhappy bride, called upon to undergo this ordeal? Had it to be? If the answer be 'yes,' then every father must tremble when his son becomes an officer. For what happened to Kurt Blaskowitz may happen to any other officer."

The clerical Germania (Berlin) refers to the affair as "the Insterburg duel murder," and the agrarian Deutsche Tages-Zeitung (Berlin) says that "if the circumstances are correctly reported, the decision of the court of honor is absolutely incomprehensible."

Other German papers recall with expressions of approval the fact that, some sixty years ago, the Prince Consort and the Duke of Wellington brought about the abolition of dueling amongst English officers. Reference is also made to the German Emperor's cabinet order of January 1, 1897, in which courts of honor are urged to effect a peaceable settlement of officers' disputes wherever possible. There is much complaint to the effect that the court-martial which imposed a penalty of two years' arrest upon Lieutenant Hildebrand (who killed Lieutenant Blaskowitz) did its best to shield all concerned, and inflicted the lightest penalty possible.

Papers outside Germany echo the general condemnation, The Daily News (London) saying:

"To a detached observer, dismissal from a service capable of such curiosities of barbarism might not seem an unbearable thing; but to a German officer it is unspeakable degradation. There seems to be some ground for the hope that public opinion may be roused to the pitch of bringing about a change in this matter. But there are strong influences arrayed against any attack on the duel, the Kaiser among them; and the Kaiser has a way of imposing his imperial will on the people, and particularly on the army. There comes a point, however, in public indignation at which the most absolute rulers must bow to the storm, and if anything can bring such a crisis about in Germany the death of Lieutenant Blaskowitz should do it."

In France, the national toleration of duels does not, according to leading editorial opinion, extend to the Insterburg affair, which Le Temps (Paris) calls "barbarous." It observes:

"The circumstances were so exceptional that it seemed impossible to maintain so rigorous a decision. . . . One of Lieutenant Blaskowitz's opponents signified his willingness to acquiesce in a peaceable settlement. The other was similarly disposed. It was at this stage that the court of honor again interposed—determined, apparently, to play the part of the Fate of antiquity. It decided purely and simply that a duel must be fought—unless indeed one or other of the parties involved withdrew from the jurisdiction of military honor and its peculiar conceptions by resigning. This solution was not inviting. Yet the relatives of Lieutenant Blaskowitz declared in favor of it—his father, who is a clergyman, and his betrothed, who dreaded the destruction of her happiness. Thus put, the question could have but one answer. Lieutenant Blaskowitz, at the order of his chief, stood up with one of the two officers whom he had no recollection whatever of having offended. The shots went off and Lieutenant Blaskowitz fell, mortally wounded. It was impossible that so cruel a climax should fail to impress the popular mind. . . .

"The question suggests itself if this be really what William II. desires. He, too, concerned himself with the dueling mania a few years ago. While refusing to suppress an institution which seemed to him calculated to stimulate in the army a chivalrous delicacy of sentiment and a susceptibility to considerations of honor, he felt the need of limiting recourse to the judgment of God. To this end, he widened the jurisdiction of the courts of honor, made them tribunals of first instance with reference to duels, and tried to substitute the unvaryingly impartial decision of a body sensible of its responsibilities for the occasionally homicidal caprice of individuals. The results have scarcely corresponded to the Emperor's design. There has been established, in connection with these courts of honor, a Draconian jurisprudence which seems inspired by a savage desire to pour forth as much blood as possible."

A certain section of the German press, however, takes a totally opposite view. The organs of the rural nobility and some defenders of the army warmly indorse the action of the court of honor, and assert that Lieutenant Blaskowitz had only himself to thank for his fate. Thus the Hamburger Nachrichten says:

"An officer should take care not to get into a condition that prompts him to acts he would never be guilty of were he sober. Every one ought to know when he has had enough, not only the officer, but the civilian. Drunkenness should, in inflicting punishment, be an aggravation instead of a palliation, in civil law as well as in military, at least so far as the cultivated classes are concerned. Hence it is unjustifiable, because of this affair, to raise new objection to the drinking habits of the officers' corps. We can not see why officers, in their sociable gatherings, in the casino, or on other occasions, should not cherish drinking customs like other people, if they feel so disposed. . . . It would be in the highest degree regrettable were the spirit which now animates them modified in accordance with the views of those who, while they may be worthy individuals, have not the slightest notion of the things that are involved. This is again made evident by the Insterburg affair. Such an uproar has been made over it that one would suppose the world had been thrown out of its orbit. But what happened? Nothing out of the ordinary or that could, under present conditions, be avoided. If the fallen officer did, in his intoxication, commit acts of violence—which, in view of the decision of the court of honor, we can not doubt for a moment—then matters had to come to a challenge and a duel. In this respect the weeping of old women of both sexes over this affair will not affect it a particle. Whoever can not bring himself to face such contingencies must not become an officer, for he knows beforehand what is in store for him. Let him instead seek safety from sword and shot behind the petticoats of his mother and his aunts."—Translations made for THE LITERARY DIGEST.

SIGNING OF THE CANAL TREATY.

THAT the Senate will ratify the newly signed Hay-Pauncefote treaty is the general opinion of the foreign press based upon the assumed advantages of the treaty to the United States. The London Times is fairly representative of British journalistic opinion when it observes: "So far as Great Britain is concerned, the arrangements which Lord Pauncefote has accepted as satisfactory are not likely to be objected to. It is to be hoped that Mr. Hay's authority will be regarded as equally binding and conclusive by his countrymen." From the naval and military point of view, the treaty impresses The Times as a good thing for the United States. The London Daily Chronicle takes the same view. It says: "The United States probably stand to gain nothing commercially by the new canal. The guaranty of neutrality in time of peace insures to us any commercial advantages which the canal may offer. The traffic on the interoceanic canal is not likely to be sufficient to make the concern a paying one. But strategically the undertaking may be of great consequence to the United States." From the British standpoint, however, The Chronicle sees no particular reason for elation. It says:

"It may be objected that, if we had held out for a quid pro quo in the negotiations, we should have been acting the part of the dog in the manger. But, apart from the fact that we made certain sacrifices in 1850 to obtain the concessions of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, which we now sign away without the smallest equivalent, we cannot help thinking that it is rather a cheap diplomacy which comes to an agreement by 'surrendering every disputed point without any compensation.' Lord Lansdowne can not be made subject to the reproach that Canning brought against the Dutch. He does not give too little, but all that is asked. He does not ask too much, but is content with nothing. Without being deterred by the dog-in-the-manger theory, we are prepared to maintain that the chief principle of business is to gain an equivalent for what one does not want oneself, but some one else does. That business cabinet sighed for by Lord Rosebery seems more than ever needed."

COLONEL JONATHAN J. BULL;
Or, what John Bull may come to.

—Punch (London.)

The London Daily News thinks that the treaty is at least not hostile or injurious to British interests. Its comment is: "This great waterway, if it is ever finished, will be an immense advantage to the world's trade, and will be conferred at the expense of the United States. They will enrich themselves, but they will also enrich others." The Westminster Gazette (London) makes these comments upon the strategic value of the canal:

"Its possible use in time of war is a matter of speculative rather than of practical interest. An admiral who, in time of

ANGLO-AMERICAN RELATIONS.

The two cousins tell each other what success they have had as mountain climbers. They propose to keep it up. —Kladderadatsch (Berlin).

war, risked a fleet in an inland canal with several locks in it would deserve to be shot, even tho he could produce a whole sheaf of treaties establishing his right to do it. And, whatever treaties might say to the contrary, it is quite incredible that the United States would, if it were threatened with hostilities, either permit an enemy's fleet to effect a junction by way of the canal, or itself refrain from making use of the canal, if it thought it could safely do so. A joint guaranty of neutrality on our part would in such a case be a positive disadvantage, since it might easily involve us in any dispute between the United States and a third party. Whether the canal is used or not used in time of war will depend not on any guaranties that can be taken beforehand, but on the nature of the canal itself and on the naval forces and their disposition at the time being."

Continental opinion favors the idea that the United States has scored a diplomatic triumph. This is put as follows by the Frankfurter Zeitung:

"It was gradually perceived in London that matters had changed so much in favor of the United States that the maintenance of English rights was no longer possible. . . . But if the new treaty betokens a complete backdown on the part of England, it can only be said that the British Government did the most rational thing it could do in the present circumstances. The construction of a canal connecting the Atlantic Ocean with the Pacific is to the advantage of all commercial and maritime nations, and it is therefore to be wished that the execution of the plan may no longer be delayed by the United States Senate."

This typical German view of the matter may be supplemented by that of Le Temps (Paris) no less characteristic of French opinion:

"It is a conspicuous demonstration of the mutual good will of two Powers long animated by less friendly sentiments for each other, and it reveals, above everything else, the importance which England attaches to the acquisition, even at the sacrifice of important interests, of the good graces of public opinion throughout the United States. . . . The American Senate, which has won this triumph, should participate conspicuously in the general delight. Yet the question arises whether it will ratify its own victory. It is yet to be ascertained if the redoubtable Henry Cabot Lodge will lay down his arms. No one knows that the imperialists will declare themselves satisfied. In reality, the thing that lurks behind these jingo pretensions and big words is the influence—often sordid and always selfish—which threatens the interoceanic canal, that is to say, the great transcontinental railway corporations and all the land transportation interests." —Translations made for THE LITERARY DIGEST.

SECRETARY CHAMBERLAIN AND THE GERMAN PRESS.

A CHORUS of condemnation proceeds from the German press as a consequence of the recent speech in which Joseph Chamberlain, referring to charges of brutality made against the British troops in their struggle with the Boers, compared the course of the British army with that of the Russian army in its dealing with the Poles, and with that of the German army in 1870-71. Die Nation (Berlin), the scholarly organ of independent German thought, says:

"Mr. Chamberlain, in one of his speeches, has drawn a parallel between the South African campaign of the English and our own contests in France during the years 1870 and 1871. That we fought for national unity with a strict observance of the rules of civilized warfare, and that the English are conducting a campaign of conquest of the liberties of freemen by letting loose the horrors of exterminating carnage, is evident. Hence the agitation over the comparison felt in Germany is only natural. In one public meeting after another, in seminary after seminary, protests are made against Chamberlain's comparison, and with good reason. The moral indignation felt amongst us in Germany has also its political significance. New antipathies are gathering against England and we have already, unfortunately, far too many and all of them, alas! far too well founded. After all, however, it is most momentous that amongst ourselves a conviction of the incapacity and flippancy of English statesmen grows firmer. For it can only be from ignorance of the sentiments prevailing on the Continent that Mr. Chamberlain hurls, with so light a hand, a new firebrand at Germany. That he really intended this provocation seems out of the question. Only to gain the applause of an hour in England did he unthinkingly stir up the German people. The same flippant and frivolous politics which plunged England into the South African war does not shrink from inciting, by provocations here and there throughout the world, passionate feeling against the United Kingdom. This is, perhaps, the most ominous sign—that men of such a stamp must lead England out of an international situation beset with peril. When incidents of this character are constantly being repeated, the future of England seems seriously menaced."

The conservative and semi-official Vossische Zeitung (Berlin) is careful to combine its denunciation of Chamberlain with intimations that the German Government can not take official cognizance of the incident. It thus comments:

"Had Mr. Chamberlain, in his unhappy defense of the English campaign, alluded only to Russia's military methods against the Poles, no one would have disputed the justice of such an utterance. For whether the subject is viewed as a contest between two states or as a civil war, the measures adopted by the 'hangman of Wilna' are without excuse or palliation. The procedure was barbarous. It was also universally condemned. But Mr. Chamberlain was foresighted enough to refrain from making Russia alone an object of comparison. This was manifestly to avoid displeasing the Czar's Government, which, by its promise of absolute neutrality and discretion has greatly eased for England this struggle with the Boers, and saved her the fear of developments elsewhere. He was, however, foolish enough to extend his comparison to other nations too far, and in doing so recalled the war of 1870. Germany is above such attacks. . . .

WORK FOR THE HAGUE CONFERENCE.

Chain up this Dog of War.

—Humoristische Blätter (Vienna).

But however justified be the repudiation of such calumnies, they will have no effect upon the fate of the Boers. Neither the Government nor the people's representatives nor the German people themselves will be moved to take measures against England, or to undertake or countenance any diplomatic intervention in the struggle."

Regret is expressed by the Hannoverschen Kurier at the German Government's failure to publish, in its official organ in Berlin, a formal repudiation of the insult. It notes with satisfaction that "the infamous Edinburgh speech of the English minister Chamberlain has not gone unanswered by German public opinion." The Kreuz-Zeitung (Berlin) approves the resolutions of indignation passed by students' meetings throughout Germany, but it deprecates any calling upon the Government to take official notice of the matter. "It is enough to let them know in England that the German nation does not propose to be vilified without resenting it." The Brunswick Landes-Zeitung says that some measures should be taken by the Government. The Berlin National-Zeitung deprecates the violent tone of some of the resolutions dealing with the Chamberlain speech. The Hamburger Nachrichten says no one in Germany has any idea of a breach with England, but it asserts that the German Government should give utterance in one of the official organs to its displeasure at Chamberlain's speech. The Cologne Zeitung, in voicing condemnation of Chamberlain, says that German excitement over his words is going to undignified extremes. The Socialist Vorwärts (Berlin) stands apart in its denunciation of the anti-Chamberlain Germans as hypocrites, and points out that Bismarck objected to the taking of prisoners in the war of 1870-71, preferring to have the French shot to save expense.—Translations made for THE LITERARY DIGEST.

THE CRISIS ON THE ISTHMUS.

EVENTS at Colon, related as they are to the Isthmian canal and the Monroe Doctrine, have occasioned criticism in the press of the civilized world; but the situation has not been clear to European journals. This may be because the trouble was originally a difference between Colombia and Venezuela, whereas the complications in which United States forces took part grew out of a revolution in Colombia. The inability to separate the threads of this tangle has been evident, especially in the German press. The French papers seem better informed. London comment is generally friendly. Says The Pall Mall Gazette:

"The course of events in Central America is showing how inevitable it is that the United States should be the principal performer in these isthmian games, and that it is just as well that their Government and ours should have settled outstanding differences and be working amicably together for the preservation of 'an open door.'"

The Daily Graphic (London) expresses amusement at the idea that the United States can, as suggested in the German press, be fomenting the disturbances. It thinks these crises in South American republics might be averted if the United States would take them in hand as regards their foreign relations.

A highly original view of the rise and progress of events in Colombia, Venezuela, and the isthmus is presented by The St. James's Gazette (London) in these words:

"No fighting has taken place; no soldiers have died glorious and terrible deaths; no President's brother has bitten the dust; in fact, the whole story is a fabrication from beginning to end. For certain purposes—what they are we need not inquire too exactly here—it has been thought advisable by the correspondents of certain New York papers that there should be a war between Venezuela and Colombia—and there you are, there is a war. Astonishing as it may seem, it is still possible, in the twentieth century, for a successful attempt to be made to deceive the public of two continents as to the somewhat elementary question whether two states are at war or not at war. Probably, even as things now are, a large number of Englishmen will go down to their graves in the firm belief that in the autumn of 1901 Venezuela and Colombia were locked in a bloody conflict, just as we have not the slightest doubt that a general belief exists that in the tidal wave which wrecked Galveston last year, the whole of the shipping in the harbor was lifted on the crest of the billows and deposited high and dry a couple of miles inland."

The figure of President Roosevelt is what most powerfully impresses Le Correspondant (Paris) in the Isthmian-Colombian-Venezuelan crisis. It is a striking coincidence, according to this organ, that in his declaration of national expansion Mr. Roosevelt should have made mention, with unexpected precision, of the trans-isthmian canal, which will almost necessarily be a trans-Colombian canal.

In the Canadian press there are indications that the Dominion is not pleased at its measure of influence in American international affairs as compared with that of the United States. The Witness (Montreal), which usually finds disagreeable things to say—disagreeable, that is, from the United States point of view—observes:

"Besides the railway company there are a number of concerns and individuals in the United States whose interests in the Isthmus are considerable, and who desire nothing so much as the establishment there of the authority of their own Government. Once troops are landed, these people will exert their great political influence to keep them there, and Colombia's invitation may result in the permanent occupation of Panama by the United States. The Government of Colombia can not be unaware of this possibility, nor of the many historical precedents which go to show that when one faction in a country invites foreign interference and obtains it, the result is loss of territory or of independence."

The Caracas press has been subject to a rigid censorship throughout the crisis, which may explain the persistence of The Venezuelan Herald in the statement that "the republic is in profound peace throughout its entire territory." The attitude of the United States under its treaty obligations is warmly approved by The Star and Herald (Panama), in these words:

"Colombia, under the terms of the treaty of 1846, has had palpable experience of the generous discharge of all the contracted obligations without any lowering of her national dignity. Can it be supposed for a moment if one of the powerful nations of Europe occupied the position toward Colombia that the United States does, the like cordial relations would have subsisted and continue to subsist?

"One of our local contemporaries some days ago recounted a number of instances when the United States, under its treaty obligations, furnished protection to the Isthmus transit, and incidentally to other interests. Whether invoked, or under special exigencies, the purpose has always been obviously the exercise of a conferred right and the fulfilment of treaty obligations. Colombia's sovereignty has never stood in danger nor thought to be by either of the two political parties who happened to be in power. No. Our European contemporaries can not engender distrust of American influence in this republic, or arouse a fear that if its country stood in need of the good offices of her powerful friend, such would be rendered with covert motives."

NOTABLE BOOKS OF THE DAY.

A CURIOUS STORY OF OLD STYRIA.

THE GOD SEEKER. By Peter Rosegger. Authorized Translation by Francis Skinner. 12mo, cloth, 475 pp. Price, $1.50. G. P. Putnam's Sons.

THIS book, which comes under the guise of an historical novel, has the atmosphere of a fairy tale of the people, full of mysticism and wonder, and at the same time fantastically real, with homely little details scattered throughout it, and shrewd flashes of human nature. It is as tho some one had really found an old record of the doings in the valley of Trawies, and had translated it into modern turns of thought, as well as into modern phraseology. The principal events of the story, the translator tells us, are founded on historical fact. But there is a curious and elusive glamour about the book that adds to its charm, while it robs it somewhat of historical verisimilitude. The author is at no great pains to make a closely connected plot, but rambles from one end of the Tarn forest to the other. As in "The Forest Schoolmaster," there is a singularly true feeling for nature in the story. The woods and hills are no mere drop scene, but are an integral part of the tale.

"The God Seeker" opens with the celebration of the midsummer's day feast, a survival of an old pagan custom, which even in the fifteenth century had not become extinct in this remote valley. Part of the ceremony was the lighting of a fire from a spark of an ancestral fire which had never been permitted to go out, the fire-keeper being one of the most prominent men of the village. The village of Trawies, which had always lived happily, was burdened by an arrogant priest, who oppressed the people and insulted them; but when he tried to suppress the midsummer's feast, and to this end fell upon the merry-makers with armed men, the outraged villagers called a council and decided to kill him. Lots were drawn, and Wahnfred the carpenter was chosen. He slew the priest with an ax on the high altar. The authorities came to Trawies and arrested one peasant after another, to no purpose. At last they chose by lot twelve men to expiate the murder; these they beheaded in the church, which was then closed. The parish of Trawies was excommunicated and the sacred Host taken from them. Left godless, Trawies became the gathering-place of all outlaws; the people neither reaped nor sowed. There remained no goodness in the valley, except in the families of Bärt-von-Tarn, who sheltered the murderer's wife and child, the fire-keeper, and Wahnfred himself.

Since God had forsaken the village, Wahnfred, who had been chosen leader, went to the mountain and brought back with him a new god—the God of Fire—and the outlawed village joined with him in fire-worship. A temple was built, and on midsummer's day feast Wahnfred the high priest locked the entire village in the temple and set fire to it, offering himself and them a burnt offering in expiation for their crimes.

This story, so wild and so bloodthirsty in plot, is told throughout with a gentle naïveté. It is a curious tale, a breath from the Middle Ages, superstitious and devil-ridden. It differs from all other historical novels in the utter lack of a resourceful and beautiful heroine and an unvanquished hero.

A STORY OF GREAT SOULS.

DEBORAH. By James M. Ludlow, D.D., L.H.D. Illustrated. Crown 8vo, cloth, 406 pp. Price, $1.50 net. Fleming H. Revell Company.

THIS tale of the brilliant campaign of the hero of the Apocrypha, Judas Maccabæus, against Antiochus, king of Syria, has a peculiar value to lovers of historical fiction, in that the Maccabæan era is comparatively little known. The story opens with the capture of Jerusalem by the hired soldiery, mostly Greek, of Antiochus. The city is given over to their lawlessness, but Deborah, the daughter of Eliah, the last living member of the Sanhedrin, is protected by Dion, who is one of the captains of Antiochus, and who falls in love with her. Eliah is seized by the mob and dragged to the Temple, where he dies, and Deborah is so wrought upon by the tragedy of his death and by the scenes of horror about her that she dedicates herself to the deliverance of her people. She escapes to the mountains, where she meets with Judas and his brothers, who are already planning to drive out the legions of Antiochus from the Jewish strongholds, most of which they have seized. To the titanic personality and astute generalship of Judas Deborah adds the intrepidity and craftiness born of her new spiritual condition. She goes as a spy into the camp of the Greek general, and renders other services which enable Judas to use his scanty forces so effectively that he finally rescues the country from the grasp of the degenerate Antiochus.

But it is the presentation of character, even more than the narrative of stirring events, that furnishes the charm of the book. Deborah, rather than Judas, is the leading actor, and most of the important incidents develop some phase of her individuality. The love thread of the narrative especially does so; called upon to choose between love and ambition, she thus communes with herself: "Love is the abiding thing. . . . Is admiration, or even reverence and self-sacrificing devotion—is this love? Or does the soul have depths as well as heights; and does worshipful regard dwell on the heights and love in the depths?" Judas Maccabæus, called from his gigantic size and rude strength the "Hammer of Israel," is a soul that "dwells on the heights." His heart is on fire with hatred of the despoilers and defilers of his country. Tho implacable in war, he is magnanimous, generous, and solicitous of others. Gladly sharing his triumphs with his compatriots, in suffering and defeat he seeks solitude.

Dion, the lover, altho a fine character, seems out of perspective in this otherwise well-drawn work. By education and temperament a Greek, the necessities of the story demand that he be a Jew. To perform this feat requires such labored effort that it seems as if literary license ought rather to step in and brush aside the Jewish law forbidding intermarriage with one of an alien race.

The Jews are treated from a much higher standpoint than that to which we are accustomed. Their patriotism and spirituality are strongly contrasted with the materialism and sensuality of the Greeks. All nature contributes to the mysticism of their religion; in the winds they hear a voice, in the glory of the sunset they read a message. The style, while not that of a romanticist like Sienkiewicz, combines the poetic imagery of the East with a realism which carries the reader back over the centuries, and sets him down in person, as it were, among the people and events portrayed.

REV. JAMES M. LUDLOW, D.D.

PETER ROSEGGGER.

THE "ENORMOUS DIFFERENCE" OF A DATE.

TRISTRAM OF BLENT. By Anthony Hope Hawkins. 8vo, cloth, 426 pp. Price, $1.50. McClure, Phillips & Co.

MR. ANTHONY HOPE HAWKINS'S last novel must be classed with the best he has written. This is praise enough for the author of "The Prisoner of Zenda," "The Dolly Dialogues," "Rupert of Hentzau," "Phroso," and "The Heart of the Princess Osra." "Tristram of Blent," the seventeenth novel from his exuberant pen, is in as romantic a vein as any, the characters are drawn with incisive vigor and convincingness, despite their violent idiosyncrasies, and the invention is bubblingly amazing. Best of all, the human interest is exceedingly strong and of the most wholesome type, in the main. (Poor Addie Tristram!)

It is really another feather in Anthony Hope's cap that, while not as utterly disdainful of circumscription as to time and place as is his wont (the whole story hinges on a date), by a creative touch in characters he invests modern life and a quiet background of English country with a romantic spell equal to that of his most unbridled gallop of fancy. The consequences of the difference between the Russian calendar (old style) and the German and English reckoning supply the motif.

Tristram of Blent is son of Addie Tristram. The "Tristram way" of living life was a unique one that recognized no standards but its own. Addie's simple method was to get all she wanted in whatever way she could. She eloped with Sir Robert Edge and lived a month or two of married life with him in Paris before he departed. Then she affiliated with an English captain, whom she married when the news of Sir Robert's death in Russia reaches her, in time, as was at first thought, to make her son's subsequent birth legitimate. Then the mistake about the death is learned. Nevertheless the son succeeds to the estate and title of the Tristrams of Blent upon the death of his mother, tho in a moment of repentance she confides to him that he is entitled to this only by blood, not by law. But she wants him to have it, and he wants it very much; for he loves Blent. When Addie Tristram died, as inconsequently and lightly as she had lived, she bade

ANTHONY HOPE.

Tristram ask her cousin to the funeral. Cecily Gainsborough, daughter of his mother's cousin, is the rightful claimant. He knows it, but does not mean to surrender. When he first sees her, down by the Pool, in the gloaming, she is so like his dead mother that he thinks it is Addie's ghost. His love for his mother and instantly aroused feeling for the beautiful girl work on him, and he deliberately, tho under cumulative strain of emotion, passes the whole thing over to her, and steps down and out, Mr. Nobody of Nowhere.

Cecily Gainsborough is as much of a Tristram as ever lived, and has fallen in love with him. She is in despair at ousting him. Pushing the "Tristram way" to the limit, she goes to his room in London and suggests his marrying her as a solution of the problem. He declines her proposal with indignation, and the flouted lady tells him "she will remember this if the occasion ever comes."

It comes, in a very different way from what either could have apprehended. Mr. Hawkins juggles once more with the mercurial Russian date, and Tristram of Blent is himself again, "unbeknownst" as such to Cecily. He marries her, still ignorant of the change, and tells her when they return to Blent on the evening of their wedding-day. There is a stormy scene when he confesses, the "Tristram ways" sharply conflicting. Lady Tristram finally "comes round," and all is as smooth as whipped cream. There is an entourage of other interesting persons contributory to the movement. Madame Zabriski, the Imp, is a dash of Tobasco. "Tristram of Blent" is a subjugating story, brilliant, absorbingly interesting, and happily ended.

THE CONVULSION OF A GREAT NATION.

CHINA IN CONVULSION. By Arthur H. Smith, author of "Chinese Characteristics" and "Village Life in China." 2 vols., 8vo. With illustrations and maps. Price, $5 net. Fleming H. Revell Company.

IT has not been the impulse of the profanum vulgus of globe-trotters, or of fireside travelers who take their jauntings gently in slippers by the fender, to greet with enthusiasm a "mere missionary returning with a book." He is apt, they say, to be hampered by the limitations of his calling; the shadow of the inevitable umbrella contracts his horizon; it is only the "heathen" that he can discover afar off.

But here comes a missionary distinctly unconventional and "up-to-date"—by no means "a mere missionary," but scholar, philosopher, chronicler, ready writer, keen observer, with all the audacity and ubiquity of a war correspondent—now mounting guard at the North Legation Gate in the siege of Peking, and now discussing, in the spirit of a statesman, the Chinaman as a soldier, a trader, a farmer, an artisan, a scholar; and, first and last, as a Chinaman.

Our composite priest-sage-philosopher-journalist, with the mind of a publicist and the ways of a reporter, shows us that it is never safe to generalize in China; that it is proverbially impossible to ascertain what a Chinaman thinks or means by what he says; that every Chinaman is a Talleyrand with a tail. The Chinaman has no patience with the mysteries or surprises that overtake the simple barbarian who never had any sages. There are things, he says, which could never be imagined; but there is nothing which may not happen—this astounding "Convulsion," for example, which, while it annoyed and "upset" him for the time being, could not by any possibility surprise him. Even now he regards it as a foolish foreign incident that must come out "alleged light" in the end, China being the same old China to this day, through her almost geologic ages of national history. She seems to be aptly represented to her own native conceit by one of those funny toys the people make—a fat, complacent mandarin, whose natural posture is inverted; the moment you let him go, he stands on his head again.

Mr. Arthur Smith is saturated with his subject; he fairly oozes China at every pore. In a style that is as virile and vigorous as it is lucid and entertaining, he discusses such momentous topics as the anti-foreign propaganda, the commercial intrusion and territorial aggression, the genesis of the Boxer movement, the gathering of the storm, the relation of the Boxers to the Government, the attack on the legations, the struggle for the wall, siege life, the days of waiting, the relief, the hand of God in the siege, and the outlook, which he regards hopefully.

ANOTHER PRINCESS OF THE AIR.

THE PRINCESS CYNTHIA. By Marguerite Bryant. Cloth, 8vo, 404 pp. Price, $1.20 net. Funk & Wagnalls Company.

TWO prefatory remarks by the author of "The Princess Cynthia" afford an excellent idea of the fairylike tale of Royalty and of its spoiled children which she has written. On the title-page is a quotation from one of the characters in the story: "It is not what men are, but what fair women make of them, that is the trouble," and the book is dedicated "To Gertrude" in these words: "A memory of summer days, Woven from out our childish plays, A fantasy of light and shade, Here is the book that we have made. Princess, you know the history best. One half is yours, accept the rest: Lend me (beside the help you gave) Your name to grace the book we made."

Knowing she was building her kingdom and its denizens out of the air, the author wisely draws prodigally on that inexhaustible element for this summer-day romance. The Princess Cynthia, enfant gâté d'un monde qu'elle gâta, is radiantly beautiful, sister to King Constantine of Romanza, and spends the greater part of the year in her own palace of Brambria, where she enjoys herself the liveliest day with her ladies-in-waiting and her courtiers, keeping them busy in paying her compliments, and in fetching and carrying for her.

Near Brambria is the estate of the Arrancourts, between which noblest family and the Court there has been an icy chill since one of the Arrancourts had his head lopped off on a doubtful charge of treason five years before. The present head of the family is a beau chevalier of a boy, Sir Palemedes. One day, the Princess strays (in the first chapter of the book) into the terrain of the Arrancourts and runs across this splendid youth. With the joyous exuberance which the author insinuated would be her note in the prefatory remarks quoted, she says of him: "If ever the purpose of heaven was inscribed on a face it was written here. A vision of noble deeds and aspirations to come was foreshadowed in physical beauty and strength. It was the personification of youth from which all might be hoped, all believed." All, yea, verily—except the end!

You think you see the finish, and you retain that complacent conceit until the very last word. Even then, you glance with the sullenness of frustration to a possible sequel. The Princess sees that Sir Palemedes is summoned to Court, and he becomes her equerry, to attend her from six in the morning till six of eventide. And he does, without a chaperon in sight. What merry jaunts they have, what rides, what saunterings in the Queen's Pleasaunce, what lingerings in the woodlands, what sessions by the brimming stream. Palemedes falls as desperately in love as the reader could wish; but Cynthia seems to hang on the brink. She is so accustomed to see everything of the male persuasion succumb to her charms! And then, that awful blight to the unfettered joy of Royalty, a state alliance for reasons of polity, is her lot.

A the book thins to its last leaves you wonder how the author will smooth out the tangle. You will see by reading the book; and it is far better that the author shoulder the full responsibility for her—surprise! "The Princess Cynthia" is indeed "a fantasy of light and shade," but the latter is Stygian at the finish.

A NOVEL OF NEWSPAPER LIFE.

THE GREAT GOD SUCCESS. By John Graham. 12mo, cloth, 299 pp. Price, $1.20. Frederick Stokes & Co.

"THE Great God Success" is a book interesting both because of its subject and because of the treatment of it. It is a novel that gives an adequate picture of newspaper life. It is also a careful study of the development of a man's character as affected by the conditions under which he lives. It is a favorite trick of the writer of character studies to make heredity the dominant force; the hero's native strength is so great that, while he may develop along certain lines, he subdues his environment, however unfavorable it may be. In "The Great God Success" the environment is the dominant force. The slow undermining of Howard's character under the influence of too much success is a piece of work whose like one rarely finds in the novel of the moment. There are no hysterics; the outward surface of the story moves as placidly as every-day life, and yet the book has a higher degree of dramatic interest than most of the books whose pages are stuffed with adventure of every kind.

No less well done is the gradual divergence of interest in the lives of Howard and his wife. When they married, she intended that his work should be theirs, and how it came about that it was not, how they drifted apart without friction, without misunderstanding, without even being aware of how fundamentally indifferent they had become one to the other, is a part of the story that the author has handled with wonderful restraint and delicacy.

The development of the character of Howard is marked by three phases. The first, where he learns his trade and works hard for the sake of doing his work well, where he is filled with all the noblest ambitions, where he has a dream of making something great of his life for the service of men. The second phase is where he works for Marian, first to secure a position that he may marry, and later to make more money for the habit of making money; his ideals have unconsciously slipped away from him, in his struggle to make the paper what it is. But it is not until he has large vested interests that the real break with his former self comes, when, in the third phase, he sells himself twice—once for money and once for position; when he pays the price for fame which as a young man so revolted him.

The pseudonym John Graham is said to hide the name of a well-known newspaper man, whose first novel this is. As the scene is laid in New York, various people have of course been identified with the characters of the book.

ARTHUR H. SMITH.

BOOKS RECEIVED.

THE LITERARY DIGEST is in receipt of the following books:

"That Girl Montana."—Marah Ellis Ryan. (Rand, McNally & Co.)

"Shorthand Instructor."—Isaac Pitman. (Isaac Pitman & Sons.)

"Common People."—Frank O. Hall. (James H. West Company, $1.)

"While Charlie was Away."—Mrs. Poultney Bigelow. (D. Appleton & Co., $0.75.)

"The Firebrand."—S. R. Crocket. (McClure, Phillips & Co., $1.50.)

"Minette."—George F. Gram. (John W. Iliff & Co., $1.50.)

"The Night Side of Nature."—Catherine Crowe. (Henry T. Coates.)

"The Modern American Bible, St. John."—Frank S. Ballentine. (Thomas Whittaker, $0.50.)

"Leaves from a Life-Book of To-Day."—Mrs. Jane D. Mills. (Swedenborg Publishing Association, $0.50.)

"The Modern American Bible, St. Paul."—Frank S. Ballentine. (Thomas Whittaker, $0.50.)

"An Introduction to English Literature."—Maurice F. Egan. (Marlier & Co.)

"Animals of the Past."—Frederick A. Lucas. (McClure, Phillips & Co., $2.)

"Types of Naval Officers."—A. T. Mahan. (Little, Brown & Co.)

"Lincoln's Plan of Construction."—Charles H. McCarthy. (McClure, Phillips & Co., $3.)

"How to Remember."—E. H. Miles. (Frederick Warne & Co.)

"On the Great Highway."—James Creelman. (Lothrop Publishing Co., $1.20.)

"Culture and Restraint."—Hugh Black. (F. H. Revell Co., $1.50.)

"Tale of Two Cities."—Charles Dickens. (Oxford University Press.)

"Boy's Life of William McKinley."—Edward Stratemeyer. (Lee & Shepard.)

"My Angling Friends."—Fred Mather. (Forest & Stream Publishing Co., $2.)

"A Real Queen's Fairy Tales."—Carmen Sylva, Queen Elizabeth of Rumania. (Davis & Co.)

"Chickens Come Home to Roost."—L. B. Hillis. (Isaac H. Blanchard & Co.)

"Princess of the Purple Palace."—W. M. Graydon. (McClure, Phillips & Co.)

"The Simple Life."—Charles Wagner. Translated by Mary L. Hendee. (McClure, Phillips & Co., $1.25.)

"The Fortune of Christina M'Nab."—S. Macnaughton. (D. Appleton & Co., $0.50.)

"The War of Civilizations."—George Lynch. (Longmans, Green & Co., $2.)

"The Gathas of Zarathushtra."—Lawrence H. Mills. (Oxford University Press.)

The Standard of Excellence—58th Year.

GAZE'S

ORIENTAL TOURS

76 DAYS, $620 93 DAYS, $740
122 DAYS, $975

Leaving on North German Lloyd Express
Steamers, Jan. 25, Feb. 22, March 22, 1903.

Egypt and the Holy Land, Constantinople, Greece, and Italy. Itineraries embracing every interesting and historical spot on the Mediterranean and in the Orient.

For rates and particulars apply to

HENRY GAZE & SONS

113 Broadway, New York

Readers of THE LITERARY DIGEST are asked to mention the publication when writing to advertisers.

WRITE ONE PRINT THE REST

Anything that you can typewrite can be duplicated exactly—a thousand times over—on the

EDISON OSCILLATING MIMEOGRAPH

So nearly automatic that it almost operates itself. An office boy can print 50 copies per minute. No errors, no omissions; each copy like the first. Ten times better than the original mimeograph. If you have to duplicate anything you write, you need one. Write for our book.

A. B. Dick Co., 152-154 Lake St., Chicago

Branch, 47 Nassau St., New York

YOUR HOUSE can be made uniformly comfortable by using the

POWERS HEAT REGULATOR

on your furnace. It fits any heater and is a great saver of fuel. Sent on trial. Highest Award at Paris Exposition. Write for free book.
THE POWERS REGULATOR CO., - 38 Dearborn St., CHICAGO

I Pay The Freight $25

Will ship C. O. D. to any station in the United States for

The "WILLARD STEEL RANGE"

Has 6 9-in. lids, oven 17x12x21, 15 gallon reservoir, large warming closet, duplex grate, burns wood or coal, weighs 400 lbs., lined throughout with asbestos. GUARANTEED TO BE AS REPRESENTED. Write for free descriptive circulars and testimonials from parties in your section who are using one.

WM. G. WILLARD, Dept. 17, 619 N. 4th St., St. Louis, Mo.

MAKE MONEY EVENINGS.

Men employed during the day can make money evenings giving public exhibitions with Magic Lantern or Stereopticon. Little capital needed. Write for particulars. 200-page Catalogue FREE.

McALLISTER, Mfg. Optician, 49 Nassau St., N. Y.

Individual Communion Outfits.

Send for free catalogue and list of users.
SANITARY COMMUNION OUTFIT CO.,
Box 1, Rochester, N. Y.

CURRENT POETRY.

Two Poems.

By DUNCAN CAMPBELL SCOTT.

I.—THE SEA BY THE WOOD.

I dwell in a sea that is wild and deep,
And afar in a shadow still,
I can see the trees that gather and sleep
In the wood upon the hill.

The deeps are green as an emerald's face,
The caves are crystal calm,
But I wish the sea were a little trace
Of moisture in God's palm.

The waves are weary of hiding pearls,
Are weary of smothering gold,
They would all be air that sweeps and swirls
In the branches manifold.

They are weary of laving the seaman's eyes
With their passion-prayer unsaid,
They are weary of sobs and the sudden sighs
And movements of the dead.

All the sea is haunted with human lips
Ashen and sere and gray,
You can hear the sails of the sunken ships
Stir and shiver and sway,

In the weary solitude;
If mine were the will of God, the main
Should melt away in the rustling wood
Like a mist that follows the rain.

But I dwell in the sea that is wild and deep,
And afar in the shadow still
I can see the trees that gather and sleep
In the wood upon the hill.

II.—THE WOOD BY THE SEA.

I dwell in the wood that is dark and kind
But afar off tolls the main,
Afar, far off I hear the wind,
And the marching of the rain.

The shade is dark as a palmer's hood,
The air with balm is bland;
But I wish the trees that breathe in the wood
Were ashes in God's hand.

The pines are weary of holding nests,
Are weary of casting shade;
Wearily smoulder the resin crests
In the pungent gloom of the glade.

Weary are all the birds of sleep,
The nests are weary of wings,
The whole wood yearns to the swaying deep,
The mother of restful things.

The wood is very old and still,
So still when the dead cones fall,
Near in the vale or away on the hill,
You can hear them one and all.

And their falling wearies me;
If mine were the will of God, why then
The wood should tramp to the sounding sea,
Like a marching army of men!

But I dwell in the wood that is dark and kind,
Afar off tolls the main;
Afar, far off I hear the wind
And the marching of the rain.

—In December Canadian Magazine.

Our Dwelling-Place.

By S. T. LIVINGSTON.

I hold to the invulnerable creeds,
And what is writ in many a learned tome
Concerning God; but for my simple needs
I ask no more than this,—that God is Home.

—In Harper's Magazine.

A SPLENDID SELECTION OF GIFTS.

In the announcement of a rich assortment of silverware, watches, diamonds, pearls, and jewelry novelties by The MacDonald Heyward Company, in another column of THE LITERARY DIGEST, will be found a large and most attractive diversity of holiday gifts. There is, by the way, a novelty in this house. While it is one of the oldest firms of jewelers, it is managed, at the present time, by some of the youngest men in the business. Digest readers will find in this choice stock of this firm an immense variety of first-class articles within reach of all pocketbooks, big and little.

Invest Your Money

in Life Insurance, for it gives at once a security much larger than the amount you pay in. With The Prudential the security is absolute and the dividends exceedingly liberal.

The Prudential Insurance Company of America

JOHN F. DRYDEN, HOME OFFICE,
PRESIDENT. NEWARK, N. J.

Fill out this slip and send to us.

Without committing myself to any action, I shall be glad to receive, free, particulars and rates of Endowment Policies.

For $..... Age.....

Name

Address.....

Occupation.....

DEPT. R

The "FESTUS"

now commands attention. It is the latest style and made in three heights:

Festus, 2 1/4 ins. high

Damien, 2 1/2 ins. high

Felix, 2 3/4 ins. high

Can be bought of all good dealers for 15c;
2 for 25 cents.

"Little Indian"
Collars—Cuffs—Shirts

Present this advertisement to your dealer and receive

A Full Length Picture FREE

of the "Little Indian" ready to frame, mounted on gray mat, and without advertising on it. Size, 10 x 13 inches.

Handsome "Book of Styles" will be mailed free. If your dealer should not have the picture on hand, send us his name and we will forward the name of a dealer who will supply you.

H. C. CURTIS & CO., 431 River St., Troy, N. Y.

See that this trade mark is on all the linen-wear you buy.

A New Idea in Trunks

The STALLMAN DRESSER TRUNK is constructed on new principles. Draws instead of trays. A place for everything and everything in its place. The bottom as accessible as the top. Defies the baggage-smasher. Costs no more than a good box trunk. Sent C.O.D., with privilege of examination. Send 2c. stamp for illustrated catalogue.

F. A. STALLMAN,
4 W. Spring St. Columbus, O.

WE CARPET YOUR FLOOR FOR $3.00

to introduce our new, serviceable and healthful
Brusellette Art Rugs

Attractive and artistic patterns, woven on both sides and in all colors and sizes. Easily kept clean and warranted to outwear higher-priced carpets. Sent prepaid to any point east of the Rocky Mountains. Money refunded if not satisfied. Illustrated catalogue showing rugs in actual colors sent free.

SANITARY MFG. CO., 52 Bourse Bldg., Philadelphia, Pa.
An Ideal Christmas Gift.

Readers of THE LITERARY DIGEST are asked to mention the publication when writing to advertisers.

Sea-Fog.

There is a ghost that walks the sea to-night!
 I marked him in the twilight, hovering
 Beyond the marshes; a gray, misshapen Thing
 To chill the very soul with nameless fright.
 And as a flock of startled birds takes wing
 Before the fowler, so, in sudden flight,
 I saw the fisher-boats from left and right
 Hurrying to harbor; and I heard the ring
 Of warning bells, and then the beacon hurled
 Its javelin of fire into the dark
 And made a space of refuge for who saw.
 Whereon, my own being safe, the outer world
 Passed from my thought. Alas, the narrow arc
 On Life's full round that tightened heart-strings draw!

—In December Scribner's.

The Cry of the Man.

By POST WHEELER.

The cry of the Man—

"God, give me soul!
 A body I have;
 Thy life I inherit.
 Grant now unto me
 An immortal Spirit!

I reach—I aspire

The evermore higher
 Is beyond and denied me.
 Give me Soul, God, or hide me
 From mountains and sea
 And Thy mighty wind
 And fear that they nourish!
 Has my voice angered Thee?
 God, have I sinned?
 And shall I now perish?"

And God gave Man Soul.

The cry of the Man—

"God, give me Love!
 A spirit I have,
 A Soul to uphold me.
 Grant now unto me
 A Love to enfold me!

I long—I am lonely.

Thy wide Content only
 Is forever denied me.
 Give me Love, God, or hide me
 From nest-song of birds,
 And dumb forest mating,
 And whelps the brutes cherish!
 Art Thou wroth at my words
 To view me with hating?
 And shall I now perish?"

And God gave Man Love.

—In "Love-in-a-Mist."

The Lost Lamb.

By JOHN VANCE CHENEY.

My heart, you happy wandered
 Along the sunny hill,
 All day a-singing, singing,
 As the happy shepherd will.

The friendly blue of heaven
 Looked on you from above;
 'Twas joyance all for the shepherd
 And the little lambs of love.

Pears'

Pears' soap is dried a whole year. That's why it lasts so. It wears as thin as a wafer.

Sold all over the world.

Readers of THE LITERARY DIGEST are asked to mention the publication when writing to advertisers.

Peace of mind and easy feet go together here. The one is the basis of "Daniel Green" street shoes;—the other comes from knowing that in them dry and warm feet are assured in any weather.

The new catalog is ready!!

Address the

Daniel Green

Felt Shoe Co., 119 W. 23d St., New York

No. 9074.

Men's Box Calf
 Pure Wool Felt
 Innersole
 Weather-proof
 French Flannel lined Splendid looking

$5

Delivered

No. 10651

Women's Kid Boot
 Weather-proof
 Double Wool Felt
 Innersole
 Pretty and Flexible Flannel lined

$5

Delivered

We have no agents or branch stores.
 All orders should be sent direct to us.

Reduced Prices on Suits and Cloaks.

If you act quickly you can secure a splendid suit, skirt, or cloak, made to order of brand-new materials, suitable for Winter or early Spring at one-third less than regular prices. Nearly all of our styles and materials share in this Sale. It will end, however, in a few weeks, so be prompt if you wish to take advantage of it.

Note these reductions:

Suits, former price $10, reduced to $6.67.

$12 Suits reduced to $8.

$15 Suits reduced to $10.

Skirts, former price $5, reduced to $3.34.

$6 Skirts reduced to $4.

$7.50 Skirts reduced to $5.

Long Outer Jackets, former price $10, reduced to $6.67. $15 Jackets reduced to $10.

Rainy-Day Skirts, former price $6, reduced to $4. $7.50 Skirts reduced to $5. $9 Skirts reduced to $6.

Reduced Prices on Rainy-Day Suits.

Write to-day for catalogue, Samples, and Reduced Price List; you will get them free by return mail. If the garment which you order does not please you, send it back, and we will refund your money.

THE NATIONAL CLOAK CO.,
 119 and 121 West 23d Street, New York.

BEST & CO

LILIPUTIAN BAZAAR

Pajamettes

Flannelette, fancy stripes in pink, blue and two-tone effects, 2 to 8 years.

75c.

Appropriate for boys or girls.

Pajamas

10 to 16 years.

$1.00.

By Mail, Postage Paid, 11 Cents Extra.

Many other articles of moderate cost, particularly appropriate for Christmas Gifts, are described in our new Catalogue of Things for Children containing

OVER ONE THOUSAND ILLUSTRATIONS.

Send 4 cents for postage.

We have no agents.
 Our goods sold only at this one store.

Address Dept. 18 60-62 W. 23d St., N. Y.

COLLAR & goes with our one-piece collar button.
 BUTTON &
 INSURANCE Krementz & Co., 68 Chestnut St., Newark, N. J.

Globe-Wernicke "Elastic Book-Case"

A SYSTEM OF UNITS.

An ideal holiday present. Fits any library and expands as the library grows. Is useful, ornamental, encourages a literary taste, and makes home attractive. Fitted with perfection roller-bearing, dust-proof doors. Dealers in principal cities carry stock and "G-W" pays the freight. Ask for illustrated catalogue 101-K.

The Globe-Wernicke Co.
CINCINNATI
NEW YORK CHICAGO BOSTON
LONDON

Whist Lessons Free.

A $20.00 series of Whist Lessons by mail, free, with each set of Paine's Whist Trays bought from your dealer. Write us for particulars. Our booklet, "Simple Whist," teaches principles of the game in an evening. Mailed for 2-cent stamp.

PAINE'S DUPLICATE WHIST TRAYS.

PAINE TRAY.

Neat, Compact, Durable — most satisfactory for playing Duplicate Whist. Cards are easily inserted and securely held. Every detail patented. Infringements prosecuted.

Sold by dealers, or write The U. S. Playing Card Co., Dept 23, Cincinnati, U. S. A.

WANTED—Active, educated men to represent us in Eastern, Middle and Southern States. Weekly salary or guarantee paid. Give age, experience and references. Bodd, Head & Company, New York City.

Readers of THE LITERARY DIGEST are asked to mention the publication when writing to advertisers.

Oh, when the shadows gathered,
And the damp upon the rock,
Heart, heart, poor silly shepherd,
Why did you count the flock?
—In December Atlantic Monthly.

Ashes of Roses.

BY HELEN HAY.

All my dead roses! Now I lay them here
Shrined in a beryl cup. The mysteries
Of their sweet hauntings and their witcheries
Are not more subtle than this jewel clear—
Are not more cold and dead. The winter's spear
Has fallen on their petals, once so wise
With beauty; yet their joyous secret lies
Still in their perfumed heart, supremely dear.

Roses of Love! Time killed you one by one,
And mocked my pains as sad I gathered up
All the fair petals banished from the sun,
Yet have I conquered! See the dead loves bless Life from my heart, which is their beryl cup,
Warming the winter of my loneliness.

—In December Harper's Magazine.

PERSONALS.

How Stevenson Wrote "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde."—A most intimate glimpse of the late R. L. Stevenson's methods of work is presented in the following vivid passage from Graham Balfour's "Life of Robert Louis Stevenson":

"A subject much in his thoughts was the duality of man's nature and the alternation of good and evil; and he was for a long while casting about for a story to embody this central idea. Out of this frame of mind had come the somber imagination of 'Markheim,' but that was not what he required. The true story still delayed, till suddenly one night he had a dream. He awoke, and found himself in possession of two, or rather three, of the scenes in 'The Strange Case of Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde.' Its waking existence, however, was by no means without incident. He dreamed three scenes in considerable detail, including the circumstance of the transforming powders, and so vivid was the impression that he wrote the story off at a red-heat, just as it had presented itself to him in his sleep. 'In the small hours of one morning,' says Mrs. Stevenson, 'I was awakened by cries of horror from Louis. Thinking he had a nightmare, I awakened him. He said angrily: "Why did you wake me? I was dreaming a fine bogey tale." I had awakened him at the first transformation scene.'

"I don't believe that there was ever such a literary feat before as the writing of Dr. Jekyll," says Stevenson's stepson, Lloyd Osbourne. "I remember the first reading as tho it were yesterday. Louis came downstairs in a fever; read nearly half the book aloud; and then, while we were still gasping, he was away again and busy writing. I doubt if the first draft took so long as three days." Mr. Balfour continues the narrative:

"He had lately had a hemorrhage, and was strictly forbidden all discussion and excitement. No doubt the reading aloud was contrary to the doctor's orders; at any rate, Mrs. Stevenson, according to the custom then in force, wrote her detailed criticism of the story as it then stood, point-

SOUTHERN TIME RIVALS NORTHERN ROUTE.

The new quick time of 96 hours from New York to the Pacific coast through Washington, Pittsburg and Chicago, and from New York through Buffalo and Chicago, at first glance seems far in advance of general operating schedules. But the advocates of the Southern route claim that a passenger leaving New York on the 4:25 P. M., Pennsylvania train over the Southern Railway and Louisville & Nashville Railroad to New Orleans, reaches the latter point in 39 hours and 15 minutes, and using the Southern Pacific out of New Orleans, gets into Los Angeles in another 57 hours—just 96 hours and 15 minutes travel. The regular time by the Northern route is the afore just as fast as that claimed by the Southern, and it traverses a more desirable latitude for winter tourists.

BUSINESS SHORTHAND

For Young Men and Women

Business Shorthand is one of the surest roads to those confidential relations with the head of the firm that will give you an insight into the inner workings of the business and fit you for positions of greater trust and responsibility.

We Teach You the Business by Mail

We know just what is needed, because we are constantly in touch with modern business men and business methods, and have in our employ the largest staff of verbatim reporters in the world, who work with us on all kinds of commercial shorthand and reporting. We give you the same instruction and criticisms that you would receive if you were in our employ. Write for detailed information today. Don't wait until tomorrow.

MANHATTAN REPORTING CO.
Dept. 23, 150 Nassau Street New York

THE CHICAGO

Typewriter - $35.00
Copy Holder - 1.50
Solid Oak Cabinet 7.50
$44.00

Your Gift for Xmas.

WRITE
TODAY
FOR CATA-LOGUE

Address

CHICAGO WRITING MACHINE CO.

87 Wendell Street, Chicago, U. S. A.

BAKER'S

Bedside and Reading Table.

ADJUSTABLE for use over Bed, Lounge, Chair, etc. Finely polished quartered oak Top, can be raised, lowered or tilted either way. Book Holders on each side. Frame in steel tubing. Adopted by U. S. Government Institutions.

An Ideal
Gift.

IN FIVE STYLES—Black Enamelled, $4.25; White Enamelled, $4.75; Nickel Plated, $6.75; Brass Plated, $7.00; Antique Copper Plated (very handsome), $7.55. FREIGHT PREPAID east of Colorado; by express prepaid fifty cents extra. Prompt shipment and safe delivery guaranteed. Money back if not satisfied. DESCRIPTIVE BOOK—LET FREE. SEND FOR IT.

J. R. BAKER & SONS CO., 49 Wayne St., Kendallville, Ind.

KLIPS Write for price-list.
H. H. Ballard, 327 Pittsfield, Mass.

ing out her chief objection—that it was really an allegory, whereas he had treated it purely as if it were a story. In the first draft, Jekyll's nature was bad all through, and the Hyde change was worked only for the sake of a disguise. She gave the paper to her husband, and left the room. After a while his bell rang; on her return, she found him sitting up in bed (the clinical thermometer in his mouth), pointing, with a long, denunciatory finger, to a pile of ashes. He had burned the entire draft. Having realized that he had taken the wrong point of view, that the tale was an allegory and not another 'Markheim,' he at once destroyed his manuscript, acting not out of pique, but from a fear that he might be tempted to make too much use of it, and not rewrite the whole from a new standpoint. It was written again in three days ('I drive on with "Jekyll," bankruptcy at my heels'); but the fear of losing the story altogether prevented much further criticism. The powder was condemned as too material an agency, but this he could not eliminate, because in the dream it had made so strong an impression upon him. Of course it must not be supposed that these days represent all the time that Stevenson spent upon the story, for after this he was working hard for a month or six weeks in bringing it into its present form."

MORE OR LESS PUNGENT.

Longer Than Ever Before.—"Do we live longer?" inquires an esteemed contemporary. "We are almost sure of it. We never lived so long before in all our life."—The Kansas City Journal.

Waiter's Arithmetic.—"Waiter, I find I have just enough money to pay for the dinner, but I have nothing in the way of a tip for yourself."

"Let me add up the bill again, sir."—Moonshine.

The Only Way.—EXCITED YALE SYMPATHIZER: "Can you imagine what Yale would do if Harvard should win?"

CALM SENIOR: "Lose, probably."—Harvard Lampoon.

A Darwinian.—ISOBEL: "How perfectly your frock fits, dear. I thought you college girls soared above such trifles."

HYPATIA: "Oh, no! We believe in the survival of the best fitted."—Life.

Sayings of English Children.—Dr. Macnamara, M.P., who has been a school-teacher, gave a lecture on "Children's Witticisms" in London recently in which he told a number of new stories as well as many old ones. The really funny sayings are usually unconscious. Some have arisen from a misconception of first impressions; others from taking literally what was intended metaphorically. The question, "What is Parliament?" obtained the answer, "A place where they go up to London to talk about Birmingham." "What is a heretic?" was another question. "One who would never believe what he was told, but only after hearing it and seeing it with his own eyes." "Define Court of Chancery," said a teacher. "It is called this because they take care of property there on the chance of the owner turning up." "A vacuum," said another child, "is nothing shut up

THE ART STUDENT

Contains elementary illustrated instruction in Learning to Draw, Learning to Illustrate, and Book Cover Designing, by the editor, ERNEST KNAPP, Director of the Chautauque Society of Fine Arts.

The November and December numbers will contain invaluable instruction for making artistic Christmas presents at home. Special offer not good after February 1. 24 consecutive back numbers (November, 1899, to October, 1901) and 1 year's subscription from November, 1901, $5.25.

THE ART STUDENT,
132 West 23d Street, NEW YORK.

DESK EXTENSION.

Attached to desk, table or wall, holds reference, account or reading books in any position. Increases desk room 4 ft., saves time, money, eyes. Send for circulars and testimonials from literary, business and professional men. Desk Extension Co., Auburn, Me. Mfrs neat, cheap, sectional bookcase

MacDonald Heyward Co.,

Successor to WM. MOIR

26 West 23d Street (Opposite Fifth Avenue Hotel),

New York City.

LARGE AND ELEGANT SELECTION OF ORIGINAL AND UNIQUE DESIGNS

in Watches, Diamonds, Rich Jewelry, Clocks, Silverware, Opera Glasses, Masonic and Society Pins and Charms

BENEDICT BROTHERS

JEWELERS

Fine Watches, Diamonds, and Rich Jewelry

Have Removed to the Washington Life Insurance Building

141 BROADWAY

Corner of Liberty Street,

NEW YORK

TRY OUR PATENT COLLAR BUTTON

Professional People.

Attorneys, Physicians and Clergymen are relieved of the many details connected with their profession and business by using

The Locke Adder.

It is particularly adapted to their requirements as well as to the busy business man. The Locke Adder is the fastest, simplest, handiest, most practical and durable low priced calculating machine.

No business or professional office complete without it. Adds, subtracts, multiplies, divides. Easily learned—lasts a lifetime. It's more rapid than you and always accurate.

Quickly Pays for Itself.

Ensures accuracy, releases from mental strain. Adds all columns simultaneously. Capacity 999,999,999. An unsolicited letter:

"When one cannot afford to pay several hundred dollars for an adding machine, the Locke Adder is a most satisfactory substitute.

It is a valuable aid to the busy accountant, and as this useful machine can be had for only $5.00 one should be in every business office."

Very respectfully,

JOE LEE JAMESON, State Rev. Agent, Austin, Tex. Price $5.00 prepaid. Descriptive booklet FREE. Agents Wanted.

C. E. LOCKE MFG. CO., 8 Walnut St., Kensett, Ia.

The Stone Method.

If you want to be able to forget that you have any internal organs; a skin that shows in its every inch that you have a perfect circulation; a step that is light and elastic; an eye that is bright and sparkling; lungs that are large and expansive; a stomach that is strong; a superb, erect, muscular bearing, that is strong. Our correspondence course will put you in possession of all this physical wealth in the most pleasant, natural, common-sense way possible. It will require only 15 to 30 minutes of your time each day, in your own room, just before retiring, or upon arising, with no apparatus whatever. Not one bit of guesswork about it. Your individual condition will be considered and instruction given as your particular requirements demand. Mr. Frederick W. Stone, our Director of Physical Culture, has been a man of mark in the Athletic world for 31 years, and has helped to put in perfect physical condition every type of man and woman our modern high-strung civilization has developed. Both sexes, all ages, 15 to 85.

Illustrated booklet, testimonials and measurement blank SENT FREE.

The Stone School of Scientific Physical Culture, 1862 Masonic Temple, Chicago.

See also Dec. number of Rev. of Revs., Everybody's, Sunnyside, etc.

Bausch & Lomb Plastigmat f-6.8

The Perfect Photo Lens, as the above picture made with it shows, is fast enough for the fastest work, and in addition, has the proper length of focus for the best pictorial results, the highest optical corrections and either combination may be used separately for long distance or portrait photography. Booklet with five difficult pictures mailed free. Buy your camera with it. Buy it for your camera.

Bausch & Lomb Optical Co.

New York ROCHESTER, N. Y. Chicago

A Handy File for Private Papers

PREPAID
$1.00

Enameled steel covers. Automatic cord binder—no knots. Adjustable snap fastener. 25 heavy manilla pockets, 4 1/2 x 9 1/2 inches, with metal eyelets. Classifies clippings better than a scrap-book. Free circular illustrates larger sizes.

A. C. BARLER MFG. CO., 109 Lake St., Chicago

LEARN PROOFREADING.

If you possess a fair education, why not utilize it at a general and uncrowded profession paying $15 to $35 weekly? Situations always obtainable. We are the original instructors by mail. HOME CORRESPONDENCE SCHOOL, Philadelphia in a box." "An optimist," according to another, "is a man who attends to your head. A pessimist is a man who attends to your feet." Among musical instruments were included "funny bones." Fort and fortress had no difficulties for one little fellow. "Fort is a place for soldiers to live in. Fortress is where they put their wives."

Readers of THE LITERARY DIGEST are asked to mention the publication when writing to advertisers.

Questions in history drew forth the following information: "The fire of London, altho' looked upon at first as a calamity, really did a great deal of good. It purified the city from the dregs of the plague, and burnt down eighty-nine churches." "King James I. was very unclean in his habits. He never washed his hands, and married Anne of Denmark." One on the Salic law said: "Edward III. would have been king if his mother had been a man." . . . "The marriage custom of the ancient Greeks was this, that a man married only one wife, which was called monogamy." "Faith is that quality which enables us to believe what we know to be untrue." Some sayings of children were very suggestive, as for example: "Grass is what you have got to keep off."

The late Bishop of London gave a prize entitled "Our Feathered Friends." He asked who our feathered friends were, and one little girl replied, "Angels." Nor was this one apocryphal. A small boy being told of Jacob's ladder, asked why the angels wanted a ladder when they had wings. The teacher, as teachers sometimes did when they were in a fix, referring the question to the other boys, one of whom replied, "Because they was a-moultin', sir." Last Christmas Dr. Macnamara was at a meeting of school children at Kennington. Before going away he said to them, "Now boys, mind you don't get into mischief or trouble between now and next Christmas," to which the children replied, "Same to you, sir!"

Mr. Tiller, headmaster of Boundary Street school, East London, communicated a paper by a boy on the question what he would do with his Whitsuntide holiday. One of the statements in it was this: "I shall put a parcel on the pavement, fastened to a string that I shall hold, and when somebody comes to pick it up! it has vanished. Not lost, but gone before."

The question, "What was the general character of Moses?" drew from one child the reply: "A gentleman." Not understanding the meaning of the answer the inspector asked why. "Please, sir, when the daughters of Jethro went to the well to draw water the shepherds were in the way, but Moses helped them, and said to the shepherds, 'Ladies first, please.'"

Just before Christmas one teacher got her pupils to write letters to their fathers and mothers which they might take home. One little girl of nine concluded, "And please, ma, don't have a baby this Christmas; I do so want to have a happy time!" Wesleyans will appreciate the remark of the child who when writing of the birds said: "Do you know the swallows go away in the winter, but the sparrows belong to this circuit." Purity was the subject which occupied the pen of the child who ended her essay, "Oh, please, may I be pure, absolutely pure—like Epp's cocoa."—The New York Sun.

Current Events.

Foreign.

December 2.—The tariff debate begins in the Reichstag with a statement in defense of the proposed measure by Count von Billo.

Edward J. Eyre, ex-governor of Jamaica, dies in London.

The Chinese government troops are badly defeated in North Chi-Li by Boxers.

December 3.—The tone of comment on the President's message in London is favorable, and the views in regard to anarchists are especially commended.

December 5.—The City of London entertains the Prince and Princess of Wales at a luncheon at the Guildhall, at which speeches are made

Two Grand Winter Cruises TO THE WEST INDIES

THE SPANISH MAIN AND TO MEXICO

By the Specially Constructed, Magnificent, New, Twin-Screw Cruising Yacht

Prinzessin Victoria Luise OF THE HAMBURG-AMERICAN LINE

Leaving New York Jan. 4th, 1902; Feb. 8th, 1902.

These cruises offer unparalleled opportunities to visit—under the most favorable auspices, and upon a specially designed and perfectly equipped steamship—the new possessions of the U. S. in the West Indies, the neighboring islands, the Spanish Main, and Mexico.

The New Twin-Screw Cruising Yacht PRINZESSIN VICTORIA LUISE

ITINERARY

FIRST CRUISE from New York to San Juan (Porto Rico); St. Thomas; St. Pierre (Martinique); Port of Spain and La Brea (Trinidad); La Guayra; Puerto Cabello (Venezuela); Curacao; Kingston (Jamaica); Santiago and Havana (Cuba); Charleston, S. C., and return to New York. A total distance of 5,320 miles, occupying 30 days. WITH SIDE TRIPS TO CARACAS and VALENCIA, VENEZUELA.
SECOND CRUISE from New York to San Juan (Porto Rico); Domingo City (Santo Domingo); Kingston (Jamaica); Santiago de Cuba; Vera Cruz (Mexico); Havana (Cuba); Charleston, S. C., and return to New York. A total distance of 5,510 miles, occupying 28 days. WITH SIDE TRIP TO MEXICO CITY.

For further information, rates, etc., apply to Dept. 18 of the

HAMBURG-AMERICAN LINE

35-37 Broadway, New York 159 Randolph St., Chicago 106 N. Broadway, St. Louis
1229 Walnut St., Philadelphia 70 State St., Boston 401 California St., San Francisco

Gates' Tours

Mexico, California,
Grand Canyon of Arizona.

NINTH SEASON

1st Tour Leaves New York and Boston Feb. 5, 1902.
Leaves Chicago and St. Louis Feb. 6, 1902.
2d Tour Leaves New York and Boston Feb. 18, 1902.
Leaves Chicago and St. Louis Feb. 19, 1902.
3d Tour Leaves New York and Boston Feb. 25, 1902.
Leaves Chicago and St. Louis Feb. 26, 1902.

MEXICO.—The Egypt of the New World, Land of the Toltecs and Aztecs, novel, romantic, delightful, mysterious; scenes of tropical beauty and historic interest. Climate, customs, language and landscape wholly unlike our own. Beautiful Lake Chapala (5000 feet altitude) and unique ruins of Tepesteco.

GRAND CANYON OF ARIZONA.—On the Santa Fe. Most wonderful scenic panorama in the world. 217 miles long, 13 miles wide, more than a mile deep. The only scenery in America that comes up to its brag. Railroad now completed to the rim. A pleasant winter trip.

CALIFORNIA.—Special arrangements for visiting the noted California resorts. Tickets good to return independently on any train within nine months.

SPECIAL TRAIN.—Equipped with compartment cars, drawing-room Pullmans, dining car, and observation car. Large observation parlor for ladies, and smoking parlor for gentlemen. In service for entire railroad portion of each tour. All expenses included. Number of passengers limited. Send for itinerary describing these ideal winter tours.

CHAS. H. GATES,

W. H. EAVES,
New England Agent,
201 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

RAYMOND & WHITCOMB'S

TOURS

Parties of limited numbers will leave New York on the dates named below for a series of HIGH-CLASS TOURS through

EUROPE

All Traveling Expenses Included

January 18th Egypt, Palestine, Syria, with visits to Smyrna, Ephesus, Constantinople, Greece and Italy.

March 29th For Austria, Bavaria, The Tyrol, the Italian Lakes, Paris, France, London, etc.

Other Tours Leaving in April, June and July, through France and the British Isles; also Norway and the Land of the Midnight Sun, Central Europe, including Switzerland, Germany, Austria, Hungary, Northern Italy, Holland, France, Belgium, England, and Switzerland and its Grandest Alpine Scenery, including the Rhine country, Holland, Belgium, France and rural England.

Send for our general announcement circular, containing brief outline of tours throughout the United States, Europe and all parts of the world. Railroad and steamship tickets by all lines to all points, as explained by our Travelers' Condensed Guide.

RAYMOND & WHITCOMB CO.

25 Union Square, New York
296 Washington St., Boston
1005 Chestnut St., Philadelphia

Readers of THE LITERARY DIGEST are asked to mention the publication when writing to advertisers.

by the Prince, Lord Salisbury, Lord Rosebery, Mr. Chamberlain, and others.

The capture of 250 Boer prisoners is reported from South Africa.

The surrender of the Liberal commander, Gen. Domingo Diaz, to General Alban is reported from Colon, South America; the trains crossing the Isthmus are no longer guarded.

A bill for the payment in gold of the customs duties on imports of grain, coal, oils, and other specified materials is rejected by the Spanish Chamber at Madrid, and an arrangement has been arrived at to exempt the payment of duties on articles of food, and extending the measure to luxuries.

December 6.—Major Van Tets, who was reported injured in a duel with Prince Henry, of Holland, the result of the latter's alleged ill-treatment of the Queen, dies in Amsterdam.

The estimates for revenue and expenditure provided for in the Budget bill submitted to the Reichstag balance at 2,349,742,456 marks.

December 7.—General Alban, the Colombian commander, returns to Colon from Boca del Toro, having reached a settlement of the British grievances with the commander of the British cruiser Tribune.

British trade statistics for November show a marked decrease in imports and exports.

An outbreak of Arabs, near Tripoli, growing out of French military requirements and taxes, is suppressed by troops, a number of Arabs being killed.

December 8.—Under the new industrial arbitration law of Australia, a court is created having power to enforce its decrees, even to creating a standard wage.

Domestic.

CONGRESS.

December 2.—The Fifty-seventh Congress holds its first session.

Senate: Four new members are sworn in and the death of Senator Kyle is announced.

House: The House is organized by the reelection of Speaker Henderson and all the other officers of the last House.

December 3.—President Roosevelt's message is read in both houses.

December 4.—Senate: The new Hay-Pauncefote Canal Treaty is received from the President and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations; a Philippine tariff and revenue bill is introduced by Senator Lodge, and a bill for the protection of Presidents by Senator Hoar.

December 5.—Senate: A bill extending the life of the Industrial Commission is passed; Senators McComas of Maryland and Hoar of Massachusetts discuss measures for the suppression of anarchy.

December 6.—House: The Republican members

5000 FACTS AND FANCIES

By WILLIAM HENRY P. PHYFE, author of "7000 Words Often Mispronounced" (50,000 copies sold), etc. A book of various and useful information for all educated persons. 1/2 leather. Large 8vo. 826 pages. Net $5.00. (By Mail $5.40.)

J. R. Spiegel, of the Pennsylvania State Association of School Directors, writes: "There has not come to my notice in twenty years a book that has enlisted my interest so intensely as '5000 Facts and Fancies.' It is the best book in its line published. It should be in every private library, as well as in every school library in our State."

G. P. Putnam's Sons, New York

NEW SIZE Type Same Size in Both OLD SIZE

Which Size Volume Appeals to You?

Nelson's India Paper is used in the "new size." It is the thinnest printing paper in the world, and makes possible the beautiful pocket size volumes of the

New Century Library

Book users in England and America are greatly attracted by this edition in which are published the works of the great novelists

Dickens—Thackeray—Scott

Each novel is complete in a single volume, size 4 1/2 x 6 1/2 inches, and not thicker than an ordinary magazine, yet contains from 556 to 1000 pages.

The type is as clear and as easily read as that you are now reading.

These volumes are as handsome as they are convenient, and make a choice library set. Thackeray's Works, 14 volumes; Dickens' Works, 17 volumes; Scott's Works, 25 volumes.

Handsomely bound in the following styles: Cloth, gilt top, $1.00 a volume; Leather Limp, gilt top, $1.25 a volume; Leather Boards, gilt edges, $1.50 a volume. Also sets in cases in special bindings. For sale by all booksellers or sent postpaid on receipt of price by publishers. Descriptive lists on application to

THOS. NELSON & SONS, Pubs., Dept. H, 37-41 E. 18th St., New York

LEARN TO WRITE ADVERTISEMENTS!

These Graduates Are Earning Big Salaries as Advertisement Writers—They are but a few links in our great chain of evidence. They are successful. What others are doing you certainly can do. For five years large concerns have been looking to us for graduates capable of earning $25 to $100 a week. TAUGHT THOROUGHLY BY MAIL. Prospectus free on request. This is "the original school you hear so much about."

Page-Davis Co., Suite 31 167 Adams St., Chicago.

MOVING PICTURE MACHINES

STEREOPTICONS You can make BIG MONEY Entertaining the Public. Nothing affords better opportunities for men with small capital. We start you, furnishing complete outfit and explicit instructions at a surprisingly low cost. The field is large comprising the regular theater and lecture circuit, also local fields in Churches, Public Schools, Lodges, and General Public Gatherings. Our Entertainment Supply Catalogue and special offer fully explains everything. Sent Free. CHICAGO PROJECTING CO., 225 Dearborn Street, Dept. 157, Chicago, Ill.

$30.00 For a Remington. Other standard makes, lowest prices, strongest guarantee. Many machines good as new, at half the cost. You pay no agent's profit. Write for catalog E and will tell why we can sell warranted machines 50 per cent. less than factory.

This $14.00 36 1/2 in. long Golden Oak Desk $14.00 30 1/2 in. wide polished. Top drawer locks other three. Has carved pulls, extension slides, casters. When closed the top has even surface. Can be used as desk and locks in machine. Closes by single action. Accommodates any machine. Very best made. Sent on approval. Ask catalog Desk No. 91.

E. H. Stafford & Bro. 18-20 Van Buren St. Chicago.

AUTHORS! The N.Y. Bureau of Revision, est'd 1880. Unique in position and success. Revision and criticism of MSS. Circular D. DR. TITUS M. COAN, 70, 6th Ave. N.Y. City.

ARE YOU A WIT?
You can become one by quoting
FOUR HUNDRED LAUGHS or Fun Without Vulgarity. Bound in silk cloth, 75c.
NEW AMSTERDAM BOOK COMPANY, 154 Fifth Ave., New York

Readers of THE LITERARY DIGEST are asked to mention the publication when writing to advertisers.

OUR MASTERPIECE RAZORS MAKE SHAVING A PLEASURE.

A MORE USEFUL
PRESENT

could not be given to any man that shaves himself than a pair of our Masterpiece Razors, which we sell for $5.00, or a single razor for $2.50. Our Masterpiece Razors are indispensable to any man that wishes to shave himself with pleasure. Are inexpensive, and are the best cutting razors on earth. Unequalled for their uniform excellence and sterling quality. They stand the test on any beard, no matter how wiry. Particularly adapted for a tender face, and leave the skin like velvet. The manufacture of razors has been our specialty since 1819. We make them, we grind them, we hone them and put them in order ready for the face. Every man in our employ is an artist in his line, and the workmanship is as near perfection as human skill and ingenuity can make it. We have no agents. We deliver free. We sell direct to consumer. We guarantee our Masterpiece Razor to be precisely what we say it is, and have but one price.

Our Pamphlet, "ALL ABOUT GOOD RAZORS," Mailed FREE to Any Address.
C. KLAUBERG & BROS., 173 William St., New York City.

Made from the best Steel that money can buy, are better, cheaper and hold the edge longer than any razors made. OUR SEVEN-DAY SET is a beauty. Consists of a MASTERPIECE RAZOR for every day in the week, in a beautiful morocco case, as illustrated. $19.50 complete.

The "Practical" Trousers Hanger and Press

Doubles the capacity of closet, is substantial and elegant and keeps the trousers "Smooth as if ironed." A set of 6 Trousers Hangers and 3 Closet Rods sent express paid for $5.00. Single Trousers Hangers, 75c.; Single Rods, 25c., postpaid. For One Dollar we will send one trousers hanger and one rod, and afterward the balance of the set for Four Dollars.

We refund your money any time within 60 days if you are not satisfied; goods being returnable at our expense.

Our 100-page illustrated booklet FREE on request.
PRACTICAL NOVELTY CO., 439 Walnut St., Philadelphia, Pa.

Did You Ever Enjoy a Meal IN BED?

Not unless the meal was served upon a table so arranged as to extend over the bed and still not touch it. Most convenient in the sick room. Excellent sewing, cutting and reading table. Various kinds of wood. Beautifully finished. Write for circulars and testimonials. Size of top, 18x36 inches. NO AGENTS.

INVALIDS TABLE COMPANY,
337 Rose Building, Cleveland, Ohio.

Catalog of 3000 MAGAZINES AND FREE NEWSPAPERS
OUR PRICES ARE SURE TO INTEREST YOU.
J. M. Hanson's Magazine Agency, Lexington, Ky.

Readers of THE LITERARY DIGEST are asked to mention the publication when writing to advertisers.

of the Ways and Means committee are preparing a Philippine tariff bill; a bill to pension Mrs. McKinley at the rate of $5,000 a year is introduced by Congressman Taylor, of Ohio.

December 8.—Senator Bailey, of Texas, announces his unqualified opposition to the new canal treaty, which he characterizes as a one-sided bargain in favor of England.

Bourke Cockran addresses a large mass-meeting of Boer sympathizers in Chicago; a committee is named to convey the sentiments of the meeting to President Roosevelt.

OTHER DOMESTIC NEWS.

December 2.—The United States Supreme Court decides the last two insular test suits, holding, in the "fourteen diamond rings case," that duties on goods coming into the United States from the Philippines were unconstitutional, and, in the "second Dooley case," that duties collected in Porto Rico on goods from the United States were legal.

The South Carolina Exposition is formally opened at Charleston.

December 3.—A shortage of $100,000 in accounts of the First National Bank of Ballston, N. Y., results in the closing of the bank; the teller is under arrest, accused of the defalcation.

December 4.—Secretary Gage's annual report is made public.

Several appointments are made by the President; George W. Lieberth is appointed Collector of Internal Revenue for the Sixth District of Kentucky. Cornelius Van Cott is reappointed postmaster at New York, Dwight H. Bruce postmaster at Syracuse, and W. H. Smyth postmaster at Owego.

December 5.—The text of the new canal treaty is made public.

December 6.—The Gathmann gun is condemned as practically valueless by the board which recently conducted tests at Sandy Hook.

AMERICAN DEPENDENCIES.

December 2.—Philippines: It is believed that deserters from the Ninth Cavalry, colored, are causing the trouble in the province of Batangas.

December 3.—General Luckban, the insurgent leader in Samar, has offered to surrender to the American forces if satisfactory terms can be made.

December 5.—General Chaffee has ordered the closing of all ports in the Laguna and Batangas provinces in Luzon.

Don't Go On Worrying

with inferior or needlessly expensive illumination in your home. There is absolutely no occasion for it. Thousands of housekeepers throughout the country have removed this annoying problem entirely by acquainting themselves with the ideal light furnished by us. It is in all respects the only perfect light for the home. It is as brilliant as gas or electricity, never smokes, smells or gives any trouble, is lighted and extinguished as easily as gas and burns but 18 cents worth of kerosene oil per month. Our catalogue W. shows all styles from $1.80 up and is sent for the asking.

THE ANGLE LAMP COMPANY
76 Park Pl., New York

$45 Tolman Range $21.75 The Ideal Present For CHRISTMAS

because it means cheer and happiness for every member of the family, and a saving of fuel all the year. Worth $45. Direct from foundry, only $21.75. With reservoir and high closet. Great Holiday Sale. We ship range for examination without a cent in advance. If you like it, pay $21.75 and freight and take range for 30 DAYS FREE TRIAL.

If not satisfactory we agree to refund your money.

Tolman Ranges are made of best wrought-steel. Oven 17½x31 in. Six 3 in. holes. Best bakers and roasters on earth. Burn anything. Asbestos lined flues.

Guaranteed 5 years.

Will save their cost in fuel in One Year. Write today for our new catalogue.

JUDSON A. TOLMAN CO.
Dept. R19, 66 Lake St., Chicago.

Big Money

Made or saved. Print your own cards, etc., with a $5 Press. Larger size for circulars, books, newspapers, $18. Type setting easy, printed rules. Send stamp for samples, catalogue of presses, type, paper, etc., to factory.

The Press Co., Meriden, Conn.

The best lamp in the world is not best, without the chimney I make for it.

MACBETH.

My name on every one.

If you'll send your address, I'll send you the Index to Lamps and their Chimneys, to tell you what number to get for your lamp.
MACBETH, Pittsburgh.

Toilet Paper

A Handsome Book on it Mailed Free

We want
You to be sure and send first for this unique book, unless you have faith enough (money back if you want it) to accept our offer to send out family case containing

1 Year's Supply for the average family on receipt of One Dollar

Delivered free at any express office in the United States.

You need not write a letter. Your calling card with address will suffice. We originated toilet paper in rolls.

A.P.W. Paper Co., 29 Colonie St., Albany, N. Y.

SAVE 1/2 YOUR FUEL
THE ROCHESTER
RADIATOR will do it.
Cost $2.00 and up.
ROCHESTER RADIATOR CO.
5 Fernside St., Rochester, N. Y.

Money refunded
if not satisfactory. Write for booklet on economy in heating homes

THE SANITARY STILL

on your kitchen stove furnishes plenty of distilled aerated water at trifling cost. Simple as a tea kettle.
MRS. JOHN ADDISON POR-
TER, widow of the late Secretary to the President, writes: "I have used one of your Sanitary Stills in my home; the water distilled by it is absolutely pure and wholesome.
I take pleasure in recommending it to all who desire pure water." The Sanitary Still used in the WHITE HOUSE. Highest award at Paris
Exposition. DURABILITY UN-
EQUALED. AVOID CHEAP AND FLIMSILY STILLS.

Write for Booklet.
Cuprigraph Co., 68 N. Green St., Chicago

CHESS.

[All communications for this Department should be addressed: "Chess Editor, LITERARY DIGEST."]

Problem 616.

By A. STEPANOW.

From Rigaer Tageblatt.

Black—Six Pieces.

White—Six Pieces.

3 B4; 2 P5; 2 P x K3; 8; 5 K P1; 2 P5; 2 P3 P1;
1 Q1 S2 S1.

White mates in two moves.

Problem 617.

By W. VON HOLZHAUSEN.

From Academische Schachblätter.

rk x K3; 1 PR5; 8; 1 S2 P3; 8; 8; 3 P4; 1 R6.

White mates in two moves.

Problem 618.

By E. VAN HEYCOPTEN HAM.

From Wiener Schachzeitung Tourney.

Black—Seven Pieces.

White—Eight Pieces.

7 Q; P7; 2 P1 B3; 1 P P4 K; 3 S K3; 5 R P1;
1 P3 P2; 2 B2 S2.

White mates in three moves.

Solution of Problems.

No. 609.

Key-move, B—Kt 2.

No. 610.

1. Q—R 7 Q—Kt 8 ch Kt—K 7, mate
2. K—Q 3 K x P 3. —

A Loaf for a King

All the Wheat that's Fit to Eat Goes into FRANKLIN MILLS
FLOUR.

There is a part of the wheat which is not fit to eat and this part—the outer, woody covering of the berry—goes into most so-called "whole wheat" flours. There is a part of the wheat, however, lying between the outer covering and the starchy interior which contains the gluten—the nerve, brain, bone and muscle nourishing portions of the grain. In the milling of white flour this, the best part of the wheat, is discarded because it is of a brownish color

Franklin MILLS
FLOUR

A FINE FLOUR OF THE ENTIRE WHEAT except the woody, indigestible outer covering is the only entire wheat flour which contains all of the nutriment of the grain without the flinty hull.

From it is made golden brown bread and pastry of that rich, nutty flavor imparted by the glutinous portion of the wheat. Leading grocers everywhere sell it in original packages containing from 6½ lbs. to full barrels of 196 lbs. It is manufactured only by

THE FRANKLIN MILLS CO., Lockport, N. Y.

WRITE FOR FREE BOOKLET.

These trade-mark crisscross lines on every package.

Gluten Grits and
BARLEY CRYSTALS,

Perfect Breakfast and Dietetic Health Cereals.
PANSY FLOUR for Biscuits, Cake and Pastry.

Unlike all other goods. Ask Grocers.
For book or sample, write FARWELL & RHINES, Watertown, N. Y., U.S.A.

BEST and MOST ECONOMICAL 33¢

Requires only TWO-THIRDS the regular quantity. Always packed in 1-lb. trade-mark red bags.

Good Coffees, 12c. and 15c.
Good Teas, 30c. and 35c.

For special terms address
The Great American Tea Co.,
21 & 23 Vesey St., New York. P. O. Box 298.

THE TYPEWRITER EXCHANGE
complete stock of second-hand Typewriters of any house in the trade. Machines shipped, privilege of inspection. Title to every machine guaranteed

EIGHT STORES

1, Barclay Street, New York. 5 N. Calvert Street, Baltimore, Md.
23 Bromfield Street, Boston. 517 Wyandotte Street, Kansas City
124 La Salle St., Chicago, Ill. 208 North Ninth Street, St. Louis.
423 Diamond St., Pittsburgh, Pa. 526 California St., San Francisco, Cal.

A GOOD TYPEWRITER
IN YOUR OFFICE will demonstrate its advantages.

Send for samples of writing, with prices, etc. Largest and most Machines shipped, privilege of inspection. Title to every machine guaranteed

Readers of THE LITERARY DIGEST are asked to mention the publication when writing to advertisers.

To Lay Your Hands
on any clipping when you want it, slip it in the pockets of the

PERFECT SCRAP BOOK

NO PASTE, NO MUSS SELF INDEXING

Indispensable to all intellectual people.
For One Dollar we will send you a 24-page (72 pockets) Perfect Scrap Book in substantial half-linen binding. Library edition, 204 pockets, half-morocco, $3.00; College edition, 120 pockets, half-morocco, $2.00. A trial size portfolio, 18 pockets, for 20 cents. All carriage prepaid. Circulars free on request. Leading stationers.

THE PERFECT SCRAP BOOK CO.
Dept. R, 150 Nassau St., New York City
We've a wallet size, handy for the pocket, sent postpaid for 25 cents.

AFTER ALL CARTER'S INK IS THE BEST

AN OLD BOOKKEEPER IS DISCRIMINATING.
Better take his advice and use Carter's.
Send for Booklet, "Inkings"—FREE.
The Carter's Ink Co., Boston, Mass.

Men Wanted

THE HOME DELIVERY LIBRARY
$15.00 to $30.00 per week and Commission
SALARY PAID WEEKLY

We can use only men of highest grade. Position permanent. Our Home Delivery Library is already thoroughly established all over U. S. Books shipped weekly from central office to local branches and Managers superintend distribution through messengers to homes of members. Special features of our system:

1. All the New Books furnished as published.
2. Subscribers get exactly the books they ask for. No delay.
3. No soiled copies, no dues nor fines.
4. Magazines furnished at one-fourth usual cost.

Send letter showing ability and character.
Also THE PARMELEE LIBRARY,
Paid up Capital, $75,000.00
Portland, 1841-43 Wabash Avenue, Chicago, Illinois.
New York, Louisville, New Orleans, Des Moines, Denver

CHARMING LYRICS AND BALLADS

Poems of battle and sentiment in the tasteful volume "For Charlie's Sake" An ideal gift book. $1.00 net, postage 7 cts. Funk & Wagnalls Co., New York.

.....	Q x Kt, mate
1. B x Kt	2. Kt-B 2	3. Q-B 7, mate
.....	2. Kt-Kt 6	3. Q-R sq, mate
.....	2. Kt x R	3. Q x P, mate
.....	2. K x R	3. Kt-Q 7, mate
.....	2. Kt-B 4	3. Kt x K P, mate
.....	2. Other	3. Q-Q 7, mate
1. Kt x R	2. Q-B 7 ch	3. Q-K B 7, mate
.....	2. K x Kt (must)	3. Q-Q 7, mate
1. R x Kt P	2. R-K 4 ch	3. Q-K B 7, mate
.....	2. K x Kt or-Q 3	3. Q-K B 7, mate
.....	2. K x P

Solved by M. W. H., University of Virginia; the Rev. I. W. B., Bethlehem, Pa.; C. R. Oldham, Moundsville, W. Va.; H. W. Barry, Boston; M. Marble, Worcester, Mass.; the Rev. G. Dobbs, New Orleans; W. W. S., Randolph-Macon System, Lynchburg, Va.; C. B. E., Youngstown, O.; Capt. A. H. Gausser, Bay City, Mich.; Dr. J. H. C., Chicago.

609 (only): A Knight, Hillsboro, Tex.; the Rev. S. M. Morton, D.D., Effingham, Ill.; the Rev. J. G. Law, Walhalla, S. C.; W. R. C., Lakeland, Fla.; J. H. Loudon, Bloomington, Ind.; W. H. Sexton, Detroit; M. C. Brown, Brooklyn; O. C. Pitkin, Syracuse, N. Y.; Dr. H. W. Fannin, Hackett, Ark.; W. J. Leake, Richmond, Va.; G. P., Winnipeg, Can.; F. B. Osgood, North Conway, N. H.; the Rev. G. W. Dame, Baltimore.

610 (only): L. R., Corning, Ark.

Comments (609): "A problem to marvel at. More difficult than some 3-ers. The avoidance of duals is superbly ingenious. Key no drawback under the circumstances"—H. W. B.; "Quite good, with several clever mates; but on the whole below your standard"—M. M.; "The key offends; but the mates are interesting"—G. D.; "Plain"—C. B. E.; "Unusually obscure key"—C. H. G.; "Remarkably fine"—A. K.; "Easy, but unusually interesting"—S. M. M.; "Key not hard to find"—J. G. L.; "Ingenious in the manner the B is restricted to one square on the diagonal"—W. R. C.; "Fine, but not difficult"—J. H. L.; "The position of Black's Rooks is a study in utility"—W. H. S.

(610): Good key, and fairly good play. The near 'try,' R-Q sq, has caught several expert solvers"—H. W. B.; "Meritorious. The placing of the R on R 6 is quite ingenious, as is the way in which the fine 'try,' R-Q sq, is cooked"—M. M.; "A great problem in every respect, and very difficult on account of the numerous fine 'tries'"—G. D.; "Most too mean and difficult to be ideal Chess"—C. B. E.

In reference to 610, many of our old solvers were caught by R-Q sq. And it is not to be marveled at, as it requires some investigation to discover the reply to this.

In addition to those reported, Capt. A. H. G. got 607 and 608; Prof. J. A. Dewey, Wanamie, Pa., 607.

War and Chess.

Lasker, in his lecture delivered at the Manhattan Chess-Club, said, among other things:

"Chess is the deepest of all games; it is constructed to carry out the principle of a battle, and the whole theory of Chess lies in that form of action."

The statement by the Champion is entirely in accord with the writings of Franklin K. Young of Boston, who, in his four books on the game, claims to have adapted military art and science to the Chess-board. Those interested in the subjects

SENT FREE AND PREPAID

To any reader of LITERARY DIGEST, a bottle of Vernal Saw Palmetto Berry Wine. Only one dose a day perfectly cures Indigestion, Constipation, Kidneys, Bladder and Prostate to stay cured. Write now to Vernal Remedy Company, Buffalo, N. Y.

Readers of THE LITERARY DIGEST are asked to mention the publication when writing to advertisers.

The Right Thing.

A New Catarrh Cure, which is Rapidly Coming to the Front.

For several years, Eucalyptol, Gualacol and Hydrastin have been recognized as standard remedies for catarrhal troubles, but they have always been given separately and only very recently an ingenious chemist succeeded in combining them, together with other antiseptics into a pleasant, effective tablet.

Druggists sell the remedy under the name of Stuart's Catarrh Tablets and it has met with remarkable success in the cure of nasal catarrh, bronchial and throat catarrh, and in catarrh of the stomach.

Mr. F. N. Benton, whose address is care of Clark House, Troy, N. Y., says: "When I run up against anything that is good I like to tell people of it. I have been troubled with catarrh more or less for some time. Last winter more than ever. Tried several so-called cures, but did not get any benefit from them. About six weeks ago I bought a 50 cent box of Stuart's Catarrh Tablets and am glad to say that they have done wonders for me and I do not hesitate to let all my friends know that Stuart's Catarrh Tablets are the right thing."

Mr. Geo. J. Casanova of hotel Griffon, West 9th street, New York City, writes: "I have commenced using Stuart's Catarrh Tablets and already they have given me better results than any catarrh cure I have ever tried."

A leading physician of Pittsburg advises the use of Stuart's Catarrh Tablets in preference to any other treatment for catarrh of the head, throat or stomach.

He claims they are far superior to inhalers, salves, lotions or powder, and are much more convenient and pleasant to take and are so harmless that little children take them with benefit as they contain no opiate, cocaine or any poisonous drugs.

All druggists sell Stuart's Catarrh Tablets at 50 cents for full size package and they are probably the safest and most reliable cure for any form of catarrh.

UN-SLIP-ABLE
are your horse's hoofs when shod with GOODYEAR AKRON OPEN SHOES.
They insure the safety of horse and driver, less on concussion, lower the temperature of the hoof. Cure and prevent all hoof troubles.
Far More Healthful and Durable than Other Rubber Horse Shoes.
Made of a secret composition of rubber which wears as long as the steel parts of the shoe. Ask your horseshoer for them.
Booklet for name of your horseshoer.
Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co., Benzon St., Akron, Ohio

A "NEW THOUGHT STORY"

"The Transfiguration of Miss Philura." By Florence Morse Kingsley. 16mo, cloth. Frontispiece. 60 cts. net, postage 3 cts. Funk & Wagnalls Co., Publishers, New York.

will find the facts presented herewith acceptable reading, inasmuch as they furnish indisputable testimony to the analogy between war and Chess.

An article by F. K. Young on the Boer-British war was published in the New York Journal of December 26, 1899, in which the writer said:

"From the standpoint of military art and science this position of the British armies is deplorable. . . . With the single exception of General Buller's force, the situation of all these bodies of British troops, thus unfortunately circumstanced, is cause for the greatest anxiety. . . . That most exposed to immediate destruction is the British column of the left under Lord Methuen. Backed up against the Modder River, it is caught fast in the fifth ambushade, and according to the laws of the military art, this army is lost.

"Strong indications point to a grand offensive operation on the part of the Boers—an operation worthy of Frederick, Napoleon, Washington, and von Moltke—with the object of terminating the war in a single campaign and by a single blow True, this movement may be but a feint, but, if it is a true movement, it is difficult to overestimate the gravity of the situation of the British army in South Africa. For if this movement is a true military movement, it shows as clearly as the sun in the sky to those who know military art and science that the Boer armies are in transition from the defensive to an offensive plan of campaign, with the purpose of capturing De Aar and from thence advancing in force against the chief British depot, Cape Town."

In corroboration of Mr. Young's outline of the situation in South Africa at this time is the following from the official report to the United States War Department, made June 14, 1901, by Capt. S. L. H. Siocum, United States military attaché with the British army in South Africa:

"The situation was most desperate for the British in December, 1899, and had the Boers assumed offensive operations, which they invariably failed to do, the British armies would have been placed in great jeopardy."

It is interesting to note that the conclusions of a regular army officer, personally present on the ground, and those of a Chess-player, 3,000 miles from the scene of action, are identical.—Brooklyn Daily Eagle.

The B. C. M. tells us that Mrs. J. W. Baird's collection of problems will soon be ready. The problems, printed in colors, will be the largest collection brought within the compass of "kiver to kiver." The problems number 700, and while the problem-editor, Mr. B. G. Laws, deprecates the recording in permanent form of so many works, many of which must be below par, yet he "wishes success to the venture of the ablest lady-composer, who so well upholds England's glory and women's right's in the poetry of Chess."

Pose by the author
"BREAKING A CHAIN"

How to Breathe for Health & Massive Muscles Read Lung and Muscle Culture

the most instructive book ever published on this vital subject.

Correct and Incorrect
Breathing clearly described by illustrations and diagrams.

24 CHAPTERS—NEW THOUGHTS
NEW TEACHINGS.

Book sent on receipt of 10c.

Address

P. von Boeckmann, R. S.
1134 HARTFORD BUILDING
Union Square NEW YORK

New Light on Lincoln's Character

As an American, you should be interested in any life of Lincoln. The work we wish to present is not only as fascinating as a novel, but also contains a wealth of new material never before published.

We now wish to add about 500 names to our list of book-lovers, to whom we can mail, free of cost, our eight-page booklet, printed in colors, fully describing the new and complete

LIFE OF ABRAHAM LINCOLN

By IDA M. TARBELL

In Four Volumes, Fully Illustrated and Containing New Material Gathered from Original Sources

The booklet will contain, among other features, a number of anecdotes of LINCOLN, a fac-simile of his hand writing, a hitherto unpublished portrait, a picture of the house in which he was born, all taken from the books.

THE BOOKLET WILL TELL YOU

Why Miss Tarbell wrote a new life of Lincoln.
Why it should be in every patriotic American home.
Why it is of value to you and to your children.

Why we make the introductory offer to first purchasers.
Why we let you examine a set in your home before you purchase, and pay at once, or in installments, or return it, as you choose.

IT GIVES YOU CHARLES A. DANA'S OPINION.

It tells you that the late Charles A. Dana, who was an intimate associate of Lincoln as his Assistant Secretary of War, and who later became the famous Editor of the NEW YORK SUN, selected the "Early Life of Lincoln" (the first volume of the present great work) as one of ten books indispensable to every American, and it also gives you the names of the other nine. IT COSTS YOU NOTHING to secure this handsome booklet. But you must promptly mail us the little coupon below.

LINCOLN HISTORY SOCIETY

105 East 22d St., NEW YORK

Date

AS A BOOKLOVER I WOULD LIKE YOU TO SEND ME THROUGH THE MAIL, FREE OF COST, YOUR EIGHT-PAGE BOOKLET IN COLORS, DESCRIBING TARBELL'S LIFE OF LINCOLN.

This axe is a fac-simile reproduction of badge largely used in Lincoln's first presidential campaign.

Name

Address

L. D., Dec. 14.

LINCOLN HISTORY SOCIETY

105 East 22d Street, New York

CLERICAL TYPES

By the Rev HAMISH MANN, 12mo, Cloth, 217 pp. Price $1.00, post-free.

Twenty lively sketches of as many different varieties of ministerial types. The intuition displayed in these character etchings is marvelous, while their irresistible humor bubbles up nearly on every page. The descriptions are racy and the criticisms keen.

Funk & Wagnalls Co., Pubs., New York.

THE GREATEST OF ALL CHURCH PROBLEMS WHY MEN DO NOT GO TO CHURCH

A bold, vigorous, and fair-minded discussion. By Rev. Cortland Myers. 16mo, 60 cts.

FUNK & WAGNALLS CO., Pubs., NEW YORK.

GEMS OF ILLUSTRATION

From the Sermons and other Writings of Thos. Guthrie, D.D. Arranged under the subjects they illustrate. A suggestive book for ministers. Price $1.25.

Funk & Wagnalls Co., Pubs., New York.

Readers of THE LITERARY DIGEST are asked to mention the publication when writing to advertisers.

A Christmas gift of Sight to Father, Mother, Uncle, Aunt, Sister, Brother or Friend.

THE IDEAL SIGHT RESTORER

WE RESTORE SIGHT!
GLASSES RENDER
DEFECTIVE VISION
CHRONIC.

Write for our
ILLUSTRATED TREATISE,
Mailed Free.

THE IDEAL COMPANY,
239 BROADWAY,
NEW YORK.

LIQUOR HABIT CURED AT HOME

The Patterson System of Treatment is a Pronounced Success

Now that it is well known that the habitual drinking of liquor and other intoxicants is a distinct form of nervous disease, and not an indication of a vicious disposition or a weak will, the unfortunate sufferer is to be pitied and relieved, rather than to be censured and shunned.

DR. C. E. PATTERSON, Specialist in Liquor, Morphine and all Drug Habits, and Manager Patterson
Home Sanitarium.

Dr. C. E. Patterson of Grand Rapids, Mich., specialist in nervous diseases and the curing of all drug habits, has made a most remarkable discovery in a form of treatment that is a complete cure for that dreadful disease—the destructive appetite for liquor. In thousands of cases this treatment has been rigidly tested and every time it has been a complete success. "I am so certain," says Dr. Patterson, "of the fact that my splendid discovery will positively cure any case of the liquor habit, where the patient will take the treatment faithfully as I direct in the treatment of his own case at home, that I absolutely guarantee to every patient that I will return his money gladly if the treatment is not in every way satisfactory." Have patience with any unfortunate drinker whose system is weakened by liquor. Do not condemn him as having bad habits, but sympathize with his unfortunate weakened condition. Write to Dr. Patterson, address Drawer 62, for a copy of his booklet—"Can the Liquor Habit Be Cured?" describing how to rid the system of the effects of liquor, to build up the wasted nervous system, and to cure all drinkers of even a desire for liquor, mailed free. Write in confidence to-day.

Corns Cured Free

ALLEN'S ANTISEPTIC CORN PLASTER cures corns. To prove it I will mail free plaster to any one. Send name and address—no money.

GEORGE N. DORRANCE, 221 Fulton St., Dept. H., New York.

The Unconscious Mind

A helpful book for parents, teachers, and physicians. By Alfred T. Schofield, M.D., M.R.C.S. 6vo. cloth, rough edges, 450 pages. $2.00.

D. E. Mervin, Kansas City, Mo.: "Parents, teachers, physicians, lawyers, judges, and legislators can not afford to remain in ignorance of this theory which lays its preemption upon the very foundations of physical health, mind, and character."

FUNK & WAGNALLS CO., Pubs. NEW YORK.

PRICES REDUCED

YOUR LAST CHANCE TO GET ONE AT COST.

$4.00 "Old Reliable" Vapor Bath Cabinet. Our 60-Day Kill Trust Price, $2.25 Complete with heater and directions. Cabinet rubber lined, wood material. Better than others ask $4.00 for. Folds smallest space. Guaranteed.

Better Than Ever and Biggest Seller the famous $5.00 SQUARE QUAKER Vapor Bath Cabinet. Style 1904. Half million sold at $5.00.

Our Sixty-Day Kill Trust Price only $3.50

Complete with best heater, medicine and vaporizing pan, and Prof. Gering's 100-page $2.00 Health and Beauty Book, giving directions how to take Turkish, Russian, Hot Air, Steam and Vapor Baths at home for $5 each, also how to treat diseases. This Cabinet, latest design, best quality materials, rubber lined, steel frame, roomy, folds flat, is entered by a door. Most convenient. Sent on 30-days trial. Guaranteed. Better than others ask $7.50 for.

$10. Double-Walled "Quaker" Cabinet 1904. Style

Our 60-Day Kill Trust Price $6.10

Same as $8.00 Cabinet described above, except has double walls. Lined inside and out with rubber cloth; black ebony finish—Never soles, better than others ask $12.50 for. Sent complete, ready for use with best heater, medicine and vaporizing pan, also Prof. Gering's 100 page guide FREE

A BIG BARGAIN.

VAPOR BATHS Benefit everybody. Better than water. Now inexpensive. Recommended by physicians, proven cure for Rheumatism, Bad Colds, Fevers, Pains, Liver, Kidney, Skin and Blood Diseases. Purifies the blood, makes clear skin, beautiful complexion, strong nerves, refreshing sleep, invaluable for children and ailments peculiar to women. THESE SPECIAL PRICES are less than half others would ask you. Don't wait and miss them. $1. Face and Head Steam. Aitch. reduced to 65¢ Good for Beautifying the skin, complexion and curing Catarrh, Asthma, Bronchitis, Throat Troubles. These Cabinets make

AN EXCELLENT CHRISTMAS GIFT for every member of the family or some friend or invalid—always appreciated. Useful, beneficial and lasts for years. Waste no money on toys and luxuries.

SEND NO MONEY Simply your name and full address, and let us send you our complete Catalogue and special offers FREE, or better still, select the Cabinet you wish, send $1.00 and we will send it C. O. D. subject to examination. Examine it at your express office and if just as described, perfectly satisfactory, and the cheapest good Cabinet you ever saw, pay express agent the balance and express charges. If you remit us full price, goods will be quickly shipped, guaranteed as described, or your money refunded, and you save return express charges. Better order today. Don't wait, then complain when prices advance. WRITE FOR BOOKLET ANYWAY.

WHO WE ARE. Almost everybody knows of us. Capital $100,000.00. Oldest and largest makers of Bath Cabinets in the world. References: Publishers of this paper, Dun's Com'l Agency, or Fifth National Bank. WORLD MFG CO., 67 World Bldg., Cincinnati, O. New Plans, New Prices to Agents, Salesmen and Managers. Write quick for offer. Wonderful seller at Cut Prices. Agents making Big Income. Plenty of good territory. Write quick.

On Buying Christmas Gifts

The following is an extract from an editorial in the New York Evening Journal, of December 3, 1901:

"If every man who gives Christmas presents would give away at least two good books every year, the results would exceed in value, for instance, the giving of the Carnegie libraries.

"A good dictionary, a good encyclopedia will educate a whole family—several generations of families, in fact—and its giver is a public-spirited citizen.

"As the brain is above the body, so is a book above any other gift."

For $2.00 Down

You may Secure the Great
20th Century Subscription Edition of the STANDARD DICTIONARY

There's a Holiday Club just being formed especially for LITERARY DIGEST readers. Pay $2 down, the balance ($20) may be paid in monthly instalments of $2 each. Merely fill out coupon below. Send now and get the great work as a Holiday Gift!

You undoubtedly know by this time what the Standard is. As The Critic, New York, truly says: "No dictionary ever had so many or so able editors."

Cut out this coupon and send it now and you will get this great work for Christmas

ACCEPTANCE COUPON—STANDARD DICTIONARY.

FUNK & WAGNALLS COMPANY, New York
Gentlemen:—I enclose $2, in return for which please enroll me in the LITERARY DIGEST Holiday Club for the Standard Dictionary. Please send me, on receipt of the $2, a copy of the two-volume full Russian edition. I agree to pay the balance of the price ($20) in monthly instalments of $2 each. You are to prepay carriage.

Name

Address

FUNK & WAGNALLS COMPANY, Publishers. NEW YORK

Keeley Cure

The disease yields easily to the Double Chloride of Gold Treatment as administered at these KEELEY INSTITUTES.
Communications confidential.
Write for particulars.

Alcohol, Opium, Drug Using.

WHITE PLAINS, N. Y.
BUFFALO, N. Y.
OGDENSBURG, N. Y.
LEXINGTON, MASS.
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
WEST HAVEN, CONN.

Astronomy Without a Teacher

"All that is needed to identify easily all the leading stars and constellations."—Prof. C. A. Young, Princeton University.

THE STARS AND CONSTELLATIONS

An easy method by which anybody may learn names of the leading stars and constellations. By ROYAL HILL. 4to. Cloth, $1.00.

"I have examined 'The Stars and Constellations.' I heartily recommend it."—Prof. J. P. Langley, Director of Allegheny Observatory.

Funk & Wagnalls Co., Pubs., New York.

Readers of THE LITERARY DIGEST are asked to mention the publication when writing to advertisers.

The Literary Digest

MEMORY FOOD

A Case Where Memory was Strengthened by Grape-Nuts.

Food that will actually help the memory as well as agree perfectly with a delicate stomach is worth knowing of.

A good wife out in Alta, Ia., who did not know which way to turn to get food that would agree with her husband who was left in a weakened condition after a serious illness and could scarcely retain any food in his stomach, was one day induced to try him on Grape-Nuts, the famous ready-cooked breakfast food, and from the first he began to improve rapidly. In three months he had gained 30 pounds.

She says that his stomach has recovered so completely that he can now eat any kind of food.

She mentions the boy of an intimate acquaintance, who was so delicate and thin that his appearance was pitiable and he had no appetite for any ordinary food. He was put on Grape-Nuts and liked the crispness and sweetish taste of the new food and took to it. His improvement began at once and he is now a healthy, plump boy.

"I know that Grape-Nuts will do more for weak stomachs than any medicine. The claim that it will build up and strengthen the brain has been proven to my certain knowledge. Sister, who writes for the press, and is compelled to memorize a great deal, has been using Grape-Nuts and says she is surprised at the result. There is a marked improvement in her memory and the brain works more perfectly and with better results.

Please do not publish my name." Name can be given by the Postum Cereal Co., Ltd., Battle Creek, Michigan.

Registered Trade Mark.

Holiday Handkerchiefs

$3.00 to 12.00 a Dozen.

Mail orders have prompt attention.

We make up especially for gifts, boxes containing one dozen assorted Lace trimmed and Embroidered Ladies' Handkerchiefs at $3.00, $6.00, $9.00 and $12.00 a dozen. All choice goods carefully selected and no two patterns alike.

For men we make up boxes of one dozen INITIAL or PLAIN HEMSTITCHED Handkerchiefs at the same prices. The $3.00 a dozen Handkerchiefs are full size and of excellent quality for general use. Every other desirable kind of pure linen Handkerchiefs for men, women and children.

"THE LINEN STORE."

James McCutcheon & Co.

14 WEST 23d ST., N. Y.

"I am pleased to report most excellent results in the use of your Tartar-lithine in the treatment of gout. At intervals I have had very aggravating attacks of this disorder and my physician prescribed your Tartar-lithine. The recovery was rapid, and it is the only remedy I can find that does not seriously interfere with my digestion."

Send for free pamphlet on the treatment of gout and rheumatism.

McKESSON & ROBBINS
97 FULTON STREET NEW YORK
SOLE AGENTS FOR THE TARTARLITHINE CO.

Pres. William McKinley said: "The Columbian-Historical Novels are really one of the most beautiful productions of the American press I have seen. The ideas in writing them is certainly a most patriotic one. . . A pleasure conferred upon those who may be so fortunate as to possess the work."

COLUMBIAN HISTORICAL NOVELS

Thirteen Charming Novels Presenting History in a New and Attractive Form.

Stirring and Fascinating Stories of Love, Adventure, Superstition, War, and Patriotism. They tell the Narrative of Our Country's History from 1492 to Present Times. By J. R. Musick.

HIGHLY COMMENDED

N. J. Smith, President of the I. O. O. F. Library Association, Washington: "In the harmonious blending of a thrilling romance with the most important facts in the history of our country, they are without a parallel."

Timothy Dwight, LL.D., Ex-Pres. Yale University: "I have been much interested in the volumes."

The Review of Reviews, N. Y.: "We recommend these books especially to the teachers of American history."

TITLES OF THE VOLUMES

- I. COLUMBIA: A Story of the Discovery of America
- II. KATEVAN: A Story of the Spanish Conquest
- III. ST. AUGUSTINE: A Story of the Huguenots
- IV. POCAHONTAS: A Story of Virginia
- V. THE PILGRIMS: A Story of Massachusetts
- VI. A CENTURY TOO SOON: A Story of Bacon's Rebellion
- VII. THE WITCH OF SALEM: or, Credulity Run Mad
- VIII. BRADDOCK: A Story of the French and Indian Wars
- IX. INDEPENDENCE: A Story of the American Revolution
- X. SUSTAINED HONOR: A Story of the War of 1812
- XI. HUMBLING PRIDE: A Story of the Mexican War
- XII. UNION: A Story of the Great Rebellion
- XIII. CUBA LIBRA: A Story of the Spanish-American War.

About 5500 Pages, 330 Illustrations, Chronology, and Maps. Cloth, $21.75. Half Morocco, $32.50.

Funk & Wagnalls Company, Pubs., New York.